These poems were originally published in the UNITED STATES LITERARY GAZETTE. In their present form, they constitute a volume of American Poetry, which can hardly fail to be acceptable to that portion of the public, who take a peculiar interest in this department of our literature. As the different pieces are the productions of several authors, and of a very miscellaneous character, it was not thought expedient to attempt any systematic arrangement of them.

POEMS,

SELECTED FROM THE

UNITED STATES LITERARY GAZETTE.

TO MY MOTHER'S MEMORY.

My Mother ! weary years have passed, since last
I met thy gentle smile ; and sadly then
It fell upon my young and joyous heart.
There was a mortal paleness on thy cheek,
And well I knew, they bore thee far away
With a vain hope to mend the broken springs—
The springs of life. And bitter tears I shed
In childhood's short-lived agony of grief,
When soothing voices said that thou wert gone,
And that I must not weep for thou wert blest.
Full many a flower has bloomed upon thy grave,
And many a winter's snow has melted there ;
Childhood has passed, and youth is passing now,
And scatters paler roses on my path ;
Dim and more dim my fancy paints thy form,
Thy mild blue eye, thy cheek so thin and fair,

Touched, when I saw thee last, with hectic flush,
Telling, in solemn beauty, of the grave.
Mine ear hath lost the accents of thy voice,
And faintly o'er my memory comes at times
A glimpse of joys that had their source in thee,
Like one brief strain of some forgotten song.
And then at times a blessed dream comes down,
Missioned, perhaps, by thee from brighter realms ;
And wearing all the semblance of thy form,
Gives to my heart the joy of days gone by.
With gushing tears I wake ; O, art thou not
Unseen and bodiless around my path,
Watching with brooding love about thy child ?
Is it not so, my mother ? I will not Think it a fancy, wild, and vain, and false,
That spirits good and pure as thine, descend
Like guardian angels round the few they loved,
Oft intercepting coming woes, and still
Joying on every beam that gilds our paths ;
And waving snowy pinions o'er our heads
When midnight slumbers close our aching eyes.

OMNIPRESENCE.

There is an unseen Power around,
Existing in the silent air ;
Where treadeth Man, where space is found,
Unheard, unknown, that Power is there.

And not when bright and busy Day
Is round us with its crowds and cares,
And not when Night with solemn sway
Bids awe-hushed souls breathe forth in prayers—

Not when on sickness' weary couch
He writhes with pain's deep, long drawn groan,
Not when his steps in freedom touch
The fresh green turf—is man alone.

In proud Belshazzar's gilded hall,
'Mid music, lights, and revelry,—
That Present Spirit looked on all,
From crouching slave, to royalty.

When sinks the pious Christian's soul,
And scenes of horror daunt his eye,
He hears it whispered through the air,
“ A Power of Mercy still is nigh.”

The Power that watches, guides, defends,
Till man becomes a lifeless sod,
Till earth is nought,—nought, earthly friends,—
That omnipresent Power—is God.

HYMN OF THE WALDENSES.

Hear, father, hear thy faint afflicted flock
Cry to thee, from the desert and the rock ;
While those, who seek to slay thy children, hold
Blasphemous worship under roofs of gold ;
And the broad goodly lands, with pleasant airs
That nurse the fruit and wave the grain, are theirs.

Yet better were this mountain wilderness,
And this wild life of danger and distress—
Watchings by night and perilous flight by day,
And meetings in the depths of earth to pray,
Better, far better, than to kneel with them,
And pay the impious rite thy laws condemn.

Thou, Lord, dost hold the thunder ; the firm land
Tosses in billows when it feels thy hand ;
Thou dashest nation against nation, then
Stillest the angry world to peace again.
Oh touch their stony hearts who hunt thy sons—
The murderers of our wives and little ones.

Yet, mighty God, yet shall thy frown look forth
Unveiled, and terribly shall shake the earth.
'Then the foul power of priestly sin and all
Its long upheld idolatries shall fall.
'Thou shalt raise up the trampled and opprest,
And thy delivered saints shall dwell in rest.

TO AN UNKNOWN FLOWER IN A SECLUDED SPOT.

Sweet little flower, so gaily drest,
 With nature's charms so richly blest,
 Thou giv'st me pleasure.
 Although thy name I know it not,
 I'll meditate upon thy lot,
 Now I'm at leisure.

On beauty's bosom thou may'st lie,
 There lose thy perfume, and there die ;
 A happy death !
 Or, battered by the tempest storm,
 Bow down thy weak and slender form
 Before its breath.

Or, torn away by whirlwind's blast,
 Borne high in air, at length be cast
 Upon the ground.
 Or, parched by drought, may'st droop away,
 Return again to humble clay,
 Nor more be found.

Or, taken from thy native place
 By pious children's hands, may'st grace
 A parent's grave ;
 Or, severed from thy taper stem
 To deck the vernal diadem,
 O'er beauty wave.

Or, o'er the seas in safety borne,
 With glowing colours may'st adorn
 A foreign land ;
 Or, in some regal hot-house placed,
 Although by other flowers it's graced,
 A wonder stand.

Or, 'scaped from tempests, drought, and men,
 Unhurt thy petals, leaves, or stem,
 Thou here may'st stay ;
 And, having spread thy odours round,
 And strown thy leaves upon the ground,
 Then pass away.

Sweet little flower, in thee I see
 An emblem of mortality
 And man's sad fate.
 Like thine, thus dubious is his lot,
 Not sure to live in any spot,
 Or any state :

Sometimes he's tost on trouble's billow ;
 Sometimes he rests on fortune's pillow ;
 A varied lot !
 And having passed through hope and fear,
 A short but turbulent career,
 He's soon forgot.

TO S*, WEeping.

Why shouldst thou weep ? no cause hast thou
 For one desponding sigh ;
 No care has marked that polished brow,
 Nor dimmed thy radiant eye.

Why shouldst thou weep ? around thee glows
 The purple light of youth,
 And all thy looks the calm disclose
 Of innocence and truth.

Nay, weep not while thy sun shines bright,
 And cloudless is thy day,
 While past and present joys unite
 To cheer thee on thy way ;

While fond companions round thee move
 To youth and nature true,
 And friends whose looks of anxious love
 Thy every step pursue.

Nay, weep not now—reserve thy tears,
 For that approaching hour,
 When o'er the scenes of other years
 The clouds of time shall lower.

When thou, alas ! no more canst see,
 But in the realms above,
 The friends who ever looked on thee
 Unutterable love !

When some, thy fond companions now
 And constant to thy side,
 View thee with anger-darkening brow,
 Or cold repulsive pride.

Or some, the faithful of that band,
 Bless thee with faltering breath,
 While from their lips thy trembling hand
 Wipes the chill dews of death.

Nay, weep not now—reserve thy tears
 For that approaching day,
 When through the gradual lapse of years
 All joys have stolen away ;

When Memory a wavering light
 Sheds dimly o'er the past,
 And Hope no longer veils from sight
 The horrors of the last.

Nay, weep not then—let but the ray
 Of heavenly peace be thine,
 Glorious shall be thy summer's day,
 Unclouded its decline.

Then Memory's light, though dim, shall show
 How pure thy former years,
 While hope her holiest ray shall throw,
 On realms beyond the spheres.

THE MURDERED TRAVELLER.

When Spring to woods and wastes around,
Brought bloom and joy again ;
The murdered traveller's bones were found,
Far down a narrow glen.

The fragrant birch, above him, hung
Her tassels in the sky ;
And many a vernal blossom sprung,
And nodded, careless, by.

The red-bird warbled, as he wrought
His hanging nest o'erhead,
And fearless near the fatal spot,
Her young the partridge led.

But there was weeping far away,
And gentle eyes, for him,
With watching many an anxious day,
Grew sorrowful and dim.

They little knew, who loved him so,
The fearful death he met,
When shouting o'er the desert snow,
Unarmed, and hard beset.

Nor how when round the frosty pole
The northern dawn was red,
The mountain wolf and wild-cat stole
To banquet on the dead.

Nor how, when strangers found his bones,
 They dressed the hasty bier,
 And marked his grave with nameless stones,
 Unmoistened by a tear.

But long they looked, and feared, and wept,
 Within his distant home ;
 And dreamed, and started as they slept,
 For joy that he was come.

So long they looked—but never spied
 His welcome step again,
 Nor knew the fearful death he died
 Far down that narrow glen.

THE OLD MAN'S FUNERAL.

I saw an aged man upon his bier,
 His hair was thin and white, and on his brow
 A record of the cares of many a year ;—
 Cares, that were ended and forgotten now.
 And there was sadness round, and faces bowed,
 And woman's tears fell fast and children wailed aloud.

Then rose another hoary man and said,
 In faltering accents, to that weeping train,
 Why mourn ye, that our aged friend is dead ?
 Ye are not sad to see the gathered grain,

Nor when their mellow fruit the orchards cast,
 Nor when the yellow woods shake down the ripened mast.

Ye sigh not when the sun, his course fulfilled,
 His glorious course, rejoicing earth and sky,
 In the soft evening, when the winds are stilled,
 Sinks where his islands of refreshment lie,
 And leaves the smile of his departure, spread
 O'er the warm-coloured heaven and ruddy mountain head.

Why weep ye then for him, who, having run
 The bound of man's appointed years, at last,
 Life's blessings all enjoyed, life's labours done,
 Serenely to his final rest has past ;
 While the soft memory of his virtues, yet
 Lingers like twilight hues, when the bright sun is set.

His youth was innocent ; his riper age,
 Marked with some act of goodness, every day ;
 And watched by eyes that loved him, calm, and sage,
 Faded his late declining years away.
 Cheerful he gave his being up, and went
 To share the holy rest that waits a life well spent.

That life was happy ; every day he gave Thanks for the fair existence that was his ;
 For a sick fancy made him not her slave,
 To mock him with her phantom miseries.

No chronic tortures racked his aged limb,
For luxury and sloth had nourished none for him.

And I am glad, that he has lived thus long,

And glad, that he has gone to his reward ;

Nor deem, that kindly nature did him wrong,

Softly to disengage the vital cord.

When his weak hand grew palsied, and his eye

Dark with the mists of age, it was his time to die.

DIRGE OVER A NAMELESS GRAVE.

By yon still river, where the wave

Is winding slow at evening's close,

The beech, upon a nameless grave,

Its sadly-moving shadow throws.

O'er the fair woods the sun looks down

Upon the many twinkling leaves,

And twilight's mellow shades are brown,

Where darkly the green turf upheaves.

The river glides in silence there,

And hardly waves the sapling tree :

Sweet flowers are springing, and the air

Is full of balm,—but where is she !

They bade her wed a son of pride,

And leave the hopes she cherished long :

She loved but one,—and would not hide
A love which knew no wrong.

And months went sadly on,—and years :—
And she was wasting day by day :
At length she died,—and many tears
Were shed that she should pass away.

Then came a gray old man, and knelt
With bitter weeping by her tomb :—
And others mourned for him, who felt
That he had sealed a daughter's doom.

The funeral train has long past on,
And time wiped dry a father's tear !
Farewell,—lost maiden !—there is one
That mourns thee yet,—and he is here.

A LAST WISH.

When breath and sense have left this clay,
In yon damp vault, oh ! lay me not !
But kindly bear my bones away
To some lone, green, and sunny spot ;
Where few shall be the feet that tread
With reckless haste upon my grave ;
And gently o'er my last, still bed
To whispering winds the grass shall wave.

The wild flowers too, I loved so well,
Shall blow and breathe their sweetness there,
And all around my grave shall tell,
"She felt that nature's face was fair."
And those that come because they loved
The mouldering frame that lies below,
Shall find their anguish half removed,
While that sweet spot shall soothe their wo.
The notes of happy birds alone
Shall there disturb the silent air;
And when the cheerful sun goes down,
His beams shall linger longest there.
And if,—when soft night breezes wake,
Roving among the sleeping flowers,
When dews their airy home forsake,
To rest till morn in earthly bowers,—
If then some dearer friend than all
Steal to my grave to weep awhile,
And happier hours awhile recall,
And bid fond Memory beguile
The tediousness of cherished grief—
Faintly descried—a fading ray—
My passing ghost shall breathe relief,
And whisper—"Lingerer! come away!"

AN INDIAN AT THE BURYING-PLACE OF HIS FATHERS.

It is the spot I came to seek,—
My fathers' ancient burial-place,
Ere from these vales, ashamed and weak,
Withdrew our wasted race.
It is the spot,—I know it well—
Of which our old traditions tell.

For here the upland bank sends out
A ridge toward the river side ;
I know the shaggy hills about,
The meadow smooth and wide ;
The plains, that, toward the southern sky,
Fenced east and west by mountains lie.

A white man, gazing on the scene,
Would say a lovely spot was here,
And praise the lawns so fresh and green.
Between the hills so sheer.
I like it not—I would the plain
Lay in its tall old groves again.

The sheep are on the slopes around,
The cattle in the meadows feed,
And labourers turn the crumbling ground
Or drop the yellow seed,
And prancing steeds, in trappings gay,
Whirl the bright chariot o'er the way.

Methinks it were a nobler sight

To see these vales in woods arrayed,
 Their summits in the golden light,
 Their trunks in grateful shade,
 And herds of deer, that bounding go
 O'er rills and prostrate trees below.

And then to mark the lord of all,

The forest hero, trained to wars,
 Quivered and plumed, and lithe and tall,
 And seamed with glorious scars,
 Walk forth, amid his reign, to dare
 The wolf, and grapple with the bear.

This bank, in which the dead were laid,

Was sacred when its soil was ours ;
 Hither the artless Indian maid
 Brought wreaths of beads and flowers,
 And the gray chief and gifted seer
 Worshipped the God of thunders here.

But now the wheat is green and high

On clods that hid the warrior's breast,
 And scattered in the furrows lie
 The weapons of his rest,
 And there, in the loose sand, is thrown
 Of his large arm the mouldering bone.

Ah little thought the strong and brave,

Who bore their lifeless chieftain forth ;
 Or the young wife, that weeping gave

Her first-born to the earth,
That the pale race, who waste us now,
Among their bones should guide the plough.

They waste us—aye—like April snow
In the warm noon, we shrink away ;
And fast they follow, as we go
Towards the setting day,— Till they shall fill the land, and we Are driven into the western sea.

But I behold a fearful sign,
To which the white men's eyes are blind ;
Their race may vanish hence, like mine,
And leave no trace behind,
Save ruins o'er the region spread,
And the white stones above the dead.

Before these fields were shorn and tilled,
Full to the brim our rivers flowed ;
The melody of waters filled
The fresh and boundless wood ;
And torrents dashed, and rivulets played,
And fountains spouted in the shade.

Those grateful sounds are heard no more,
The springs are silent in the sun,
The rivers, by the blackening shore,
With lessening current run ;
The realm our tribes are crushed to get
May be a barren desert yet.

THE GRAVES OF THE PATRIOTS.

Here rest the great and good—here they repose
 After their generous toil. A sacred band,
 They take their sleep together, while the year
 Comes with its early flowers to deck their graves,
 And gathers them again, as Winter frowns.
 Theirs is no vulgar sepulchre—green sods
 Are all their monument, and yet it tells
 A nobler history, than pillared piles,
 Or the eternal pyramids. They need
 No statue nor inscription to reveal
 Their greatness. It is round them, and the joy
 With which their children tread the hallowed ground
 That holds their venerated bones, the peace
 That smiles on all they fought for, and the wealth
 That clothes the land they rescued,—these, though mute,
 As feeling ever is when deepest,—these
 Are monuments more lasting, than the fanes
 Reared to the kings and demigods of old.

Touch not the ancient elms, that bend their shade
 Over their lowly graves; beneath their boughs
 There is a solemn darkness, even at noon,
 Suited to such as visit at the shrine
 Of serious liberty. No factious voice
 Called them unto the field of generous fame,
 But the pure consecrated love of home.

No deeper feeling sways us, when it wakes
In all its greatness. It has told itself
To the astonished gaze of awe-struck kings,
At Marathon, at Bannockburn, and here,
Where first our patriots sent the invader back
Broken and cowed. Let these green elms be all
To tell us where they fought, and where they lie.
Their feelings were all nature, and they need
No art to make them known. They live in us,
While we are like them, simple, hardy, bold,
Worshipping nothing but our own pure hearts,
And the one universal Lord. They need
No column pointing to the heaven they sought,
To tell us of their home. The heart itself,
Left to its own free purpose, hastens there,
And there alone reposes. Let these elms
Bend their protecting shadow o'er their graves,
And build with their green roof the only fane,
Where we may gather on the hallowed day,
That rose to them in blood, and set in glory.
Here let us meet, and while our motionless lips
Give not a sound, and all around is mute
In the deep sabbath of a heart too full
For words or tears—here let us strew the sod
With the first flowers of spring, and make to them
An offering of the plenty, Nature gives,
And they have rendered ours—perpetually.

MONUMENT MOUNTAIN.

Thou who would'st see the lovely and the wild
Mingled in harmony on Nature's face,
Ascend our rocky mountains. Let thy foot
Fail not with weariness, for on their tops
The beauty and the majesty of earth
Spread wide beneath, shall make thee to forget
The steep and toilsome way. There, as thou stand'st
The haunts of men below thee, and above
The mountain summits, thy expanding heart
Shall feel a kindred with that loftier world
To which thou art translated, and partake
The enlargement of thy vision. Thou shalt look Upon the green and rolling forest tops,
And down into the secrets of the glens,
And streams, that with their bordering thickets strive
To hide their windings. Thou shalt gaze, at once,
Here on white villages and tilth and herds
And swarming roads, and there on solitudes
That only hear the torrent and the wind
And eagle's shriek. There is a precipice
That seems a fragment of some mighty wall
Built by the hand that fashioned the old world
To separate its nations, and thrown down
When the flood drowned them. To the north a path Conducts you up the narrow battlement.
Steep is the western side, shaggy and wild
With mossy trees, and pinnacles of flint,

And many a hanging crag. But, to the east,
 Sheer to the vale go down the bare old cliffs,—
 Huge pillars, that in middle heaven upbear
 Their weather-beaten capitals, here dark
 With the thick moss of centuries, and there
 Of chalky whiteness where the thunderbolt
 Has splintered them. It is a fearful thing
 To stand upon the beetling verge, and see Where storm and lightning, from that huge gray wall,
 Have tumbled down vast blocks, and at the base
 Dashed them in fragments, and to lay thine ear
 Over the dizzy depth, and hear the sound
 Of winds, that struggle with the woods below,
 Come up like ocean murmurs. But the scene
 Is lovely round ; a beautiful river there
 Wanders amid the fresh and fertile meads,
 The paradise he made unto himself,
 Mining the soil for ages. On each side
 The fields swell upward to the hills ; beyond,
 Above the hills, in the blue distance, rise
 The mighty columns with which earth props heaven.

There is a tale about these gray old rocks,
 A sad tradition of unhappy love
 And sorrows borne and ended, long ago,
 When over these fair vales the savage sought
 His game in the thick woods. There was a maid,
 The fairest of the Indian maids, bright-eyed,
 With wealth of raven tresses, a light form,
 And a gay heart. About her cabin door

The wide old woods resounded with her song
 And fairy laughter all the summer day.
 She loved her cousin ; such a love was deemed
 By the morality of those stern tribes,
 Incestuous, and she struggled hard and long
 Against her love, and reasoned with her heart
 As simple Indian maiden might. In vain.
 Then her eye lost its lustre and her step
 Its lightness, and the gray old men that passed
 Her dwelling, wondered that they heard no more
 The accustomed song and laugh of her, whose looks
 Were like the cheerful smile of Spring, they said, Upon the Winter of their age. She went
 To weep where no eye saw, and was not found
 When all the merry girls were met to dance,
 And all the hunters of the tribe were out ;
 Nor when they gathered from the rustling husk
 The shining ear ; nor when, by the river side,
 They pulled the grape and startled the wild shades
 With sounds of mirth. The keen-eyed Indian dames
 Would whisper to each other, as they saw
 Her wasting form, and say, The girl will die.

One day into the bosom of a friend,
 A playmate of her young and innocent years,
 She poured her griefs. Thou know'st, and thou alone,
 She said, for I have told thee, all my love
 And guilt and sorrow. I am sick of life.
 All night I weep in darkness, and the morn
 Glares on me, as upon a thing accurst,
 That has no business on the earth. I hate

The pastimes and the pleasant toils that once
 I loved ; the cheerful voices of my friends
 Have an unnatural horror in mine ear.
 In dreams, my mother, from the land of souls,
 Calls me and chidès me. All that look on me
 Do seem to know my shame ; I cannot bear
 Their eyes ; I cannot from my heart root out
 The love that wrings it so, and I must die.

It was a Summer morning and they went
 To this old precipice. About the cliffs,
 Lay garlands, ears of maize, and skins of wolf
 And shaggy bear, the offerings of the tribe
 Here made to the Great Spirit, for they deemed,
 Like worshippers of the elder time, that God
 Doth walk on the high places and affect
 The earth-o'erlooking mountains. She had on
 The ornaments with which the father loved
 To deck the beauty of his bright-eyed girl,
 And bade her wear when stranger warriors came
 To be his guests. Here the friends sat them down,
 And sung, all day, old songs of love and death,
 And decked the poor wan victim's hair with flowers,
 And prayed that safe and swift might be her way
 To the calm world of sunshine, where no grief
 Makes the heart heavy and the eyelids red.
 Beautiful lay the region of her tribe
 Below her—waters resting in the embrace
 Of the wide forest, and maize-planted glades
 Opening amid the leafy wilderness.
 She gazed upon it long, and at the sight

Of her own village peeping through the trees,
And her own dwelling, and the cabin roof
Of him she loved with an unlawful love,
And came to die for, a warm gush of tears
Ran from her eyes. But when the sun grew low
And the hill shadows long, she threw herself
From the steep rock and perished. There was scooped
Upon the mountain's southern slope, a grave;
And there they laid her, in the very garb
With which the maiden decked herself for death,
With the same withering wild flowers in her hair.
And o'er the mould that covered her, the tribe
Built up a simple monument, a cone
Of small loose stones. Thence forward, all who passed,
Hunter and dame and virgin, laid a stone
In silence on the pile. It stands there yet.
And Indians from the distant West, that come
To visit where their fathers' bones are laid,
Yet tell the sorrowful tale, and to this day
The mountain where the hapless maiden died
Is called the Mountain of the Monument.

LINES FROM A TRAVELLER'S PORT FOLIO.

I stood upon the lofty Alleghany.
 It was a summer morning—the bright sun
 Shone o'er the mountain tops on the fair vales,
 Which lay stretched out beneath his gladdening beam.
 Calm, peaceful vales, such as the aged love
 To rest their wearied limbs upon when life
 Draws near its close—such as young lovers seek.
 And there I stood upon that mountain's brow,
 And looked upon the morning ;—far away
 On either hand, and where the Ohio glides
 Serenely to the bed of other waters,
 Lay fields of brightly shining summer grain,
 Where lusty arms plied nimble reaping hooks,
 And bright-eyed virgins, as of olden time,
 Them followed, and the yellow sheaf upreared.
 And there were pastures fair beneath mine eye,
 And o'er them grazed innumerable herds and flocks,
 The wealth of the strong man, who years ago
 Built his rude cabin by the beetling brow
 Of these eternal mountains, and sat down,
 And lopt the sycamore, and felled the oak,
 And had him sons and daughters born amidst
 The shouts and battle-songs of savage tribes.
 And still I stood upon that mountain's brow,
 And still it was the morning. O'er me past
 A breath from out the deep and fearful glen,
 Which lay beside me, fringed with meagre pines—

The shrubbery of the bleak mountain top.
 Within me was a voice which bade me look
 Upon the ages which had passed away ;—
 Upon the time when those far-spreading vales
 Were peopled by another race of men ;—
 The builders of the proud sepulchral pile
 And architects of works of use unknown.
 'Tis thus the potent finger of decay
 Saps the foundation of all earthly things,
 And there will pass a very few brief years
 Ere all who people this fair land shall lie
 In the same grave which holds her earliest sons.
 The oak shall grow upon the well ploughed glebe—
 The wild vine leap upon the nectarine's trunk,
 And strangle it with a too close embrace—
 The thistle shall o'errun the beautiful mead—
 The bison feed upon the cities' site—
 The adder coil him in the lady's bower
 And hiss upon the mastodon, as he Comes from his exile of a thousand years.
 And these shall be because such things have been,
 For nature is immutable and keeps
 No changeful course.

THE RIVULET.

This little rill that, from the springs
Of yonder grove, its current brings,
Plays on the slope awhile, and then
Goes prattling into groves again,
Oft to its warbling waters drew
My little feet when life was new.
When woods in early green were drest,
And from the chambers of the west
The warmer breezes, travelling out,
Breathed the new scent of flowers about,
My truant steps from home would stray,
Upon its grassy side to play ;
To crop the violet on its brim,
And listen to the throstle's hymn,
With blooming cheek and open brow,
As young and gay, sweet rill, as thou.

And when the days of boyhood came,
And I had grown in love with fame,
Duly I sought thy banks, and tried
My first rude numbers by thy side.
Words cannot tell how glad and gay
The scenes of life before me lay.
High visions then, and lofty schemes
Glorious and bright as fairy dreams,
And daring hopes, that now to speak
Would bring the blood into my cheek,

Passed o'er me ; and I wrote on high
A name I deemed should never die.

Years change thee not. Upon yon hill
The tall old maples, verdant still,
Yet tell, in proud and grand decay,
How swift the years have passed away,
Since first, a child, and half afraid,
I wandered in the forest shade.
But thou, gay, merry rivulet,
Dost dimple, play, and prattle yet ;
And sporting with the sands that pave
The windings of thy silver wave,
And dancing to thy own wild chime,
Thou laughest at the lapse of time.
The same sweet sounds are in my ear
My early childhood loved to hear ;
As pure thy limpid waters run,
As bright they sparkle to the sun ;
As fresh the herbs that crowd to drink
The moisture of thy oozy brink ;
The violet there, in soft May dew,
Comes up, as modest and as blue ;
As green amid thy current's stress,
Floats the scarce-rooted water cress ;
And the brown ground bird, in thy glen,
Still chirps as merrily as then.

Thou changest not—but I am changed,
Since first thy pleasant banks I ranged ;

And the grave stranger, come to see
 The play-place of his infancy,
 Has scarce a single trace of him
 Who sported once upon thy brim.
 The visions of my youth are past—
 Too bright, too beautiful to last.
 I've tried the world—it wears no more
 The colouring of romance it wore.
 Yet well has nature kept the truth
 She promised to my earliest youth ;
 The radiant beauty, shed abroad
 On all the glorious works of God,
 Shows freshly, to my sobered eye,
 Each charm it wore in days gone by.

A few brief years shall pass away,
 And I, all trembling, weak, and grey,
 Bowed to the earth, which waits to fold
 My ashes in the embracing mould,
 (If haply the dark will of fate Indulge my life so long a date)
 May come for the last time to look Upon my childhood's favourite brook.
 Then dimly on my eye shall gleam
 The sparkle of thy dancing stream ;
 And faintly on my ear shall fall
 Thy prattling current's merry call ;
 Yet shalt thou flow as glad and bright
 As when thou met'st my infant sight.

And I shall sleep—and on thy side,
 As ages after ages glide,
 Children their early sports shall try,
 And pass to hoary age and die.
 But thou, unchanged from year to year,
 Gaily shalt play and glitter here ;
 Amid young flowers and tender grass
 Thy endless infancy shalt pass ;
 And, singing down thy narrow glen,
 Shalt mock the fading race of men.

MORNING AMONG THE HILLS.

A night had passed away among the hills,
 And now the first faint tokens of the dawn
 Showed in the east. The bright and dewy star,
 Whose mission is to usher in the morn,
 Looked through the cool air, like a blessed thing
 In a far purer world. Below there lay
 Wrapped round a woody mountain tranquilly
 A misty cloud. Its edges caught the light,
 That now came up from out the unseen depth
 Of the full fount of day, and they were laced
 With colours ever-brightening. I had waked
 From a long sleep of many changing dreams,
 And now in the fresh forest air I stood
 Nerved to another day of wandering.

Before me rose a pinnacle of rock,
 Lifted above the wood that hemmed it in,
 And now already glowing. There the beams
 Came from the far horizon, and they wrapped it
 In light and glory. Round its vapoury cone
 A crown of far-diverging rays shot out,
 And gave to it the semblance of an altar
 Lit for the worship of the undying flame,
 That centred in the circle of the sun,
 Now coming from the ocean's fathomless caves,
 Anon would stand in solitary pomp
 Above the loftiest peaks, and cover them
 With splendour as a garment. Thitherward
 I bent my eager steps; and through the grove
 Now dark as deepest night, and thickets hung
 With a rich harvest of unnumbered gems,
 Waiting the clearer dawn to catch the hues
 Shed from the starry fringes of its veil
 On cloud and mist and dew, and backward thrown
 With undiminished beauty, on I went Mounting with hasty foot, and thence emerging
 I scaled that rocky steep, and there awaited
 Silent the full appearing of the sun.

Below there lay a far extended sea
 Rolling in feathery waves. The wind blew o'er it,
 And tossed it round the high ascending racks,
 And swept it through the half hidden forest tops,
 Till, like an ocean waking into storm,
 It heaved and weltered. Gloriously the light
 Crested its billows, and those craggy islands

Shone on it like to palaces of spar
 Built on a sea of pearl. Far overhead
 The sky without a vapour or a stain,
 Intensely blue, even deepened into purple,
 Where nearer the horizon it received
 A tincture from the mist that there dissolved
 Into the viewless air,—the sky bent round
 The awful dome of a most mighty temple
 Built by omnipotent hands for nothing less Than infinite worship. There I stood in silence—
 I had no words to tell the mingled thoughts
 Of wonder and of joy, that then came o'er me,
 Even with a whirlwind's rush. So beautiful,
 So bright, so glorious! Such a majesty
 In yon pure vault! So many dazzling tints
 In yonder waste of waves,—so like the ocean
 With its unnumbered islands there incircled
 By foaming surges, that the mounting eagle,
 Lifting his fearless pinion through the clouds
 To bathe in purest sunbeams, seemed an ospray
 Hovering above his prey, and yon tall pines,
 Their tops half mantled in a snowy veil,
 A frigate with full convass, bearing on
 To conquest and to glory. But even these,
 Had round them something of the lofty air
 In which they moved ;—not like to things of earth,
 But heightened, and made glorious, as became Such pomp and splendour.

Who can tell the brightness,
 That every moment caught a newer glow ;

That circle, with its centre like the heart
 Of elemental fire, and spreading out
 In floods of liquid gold on the blue sky
 And on the opaline waves, crowned with a rainbow
 Bright as the arch that bent above the throne
 Seen in a vision by the holy man
 In Patmos ! Who can tell how it ascended,
 And flowed more widely o'er that lifted ocean
 Till instantly the unobstructed sun
 Rolled up his sphere of fire, floating away—
 Away in a pure ether, far from earth,
 And all its clouds,—and pouring forth unbounded
 His arrowy brightness ! From that burning centre
 At once there ran along the level line
 Of that imagined sea, a stream of gold—
 Liquid and flowing gold, that seemed to tremble
 Even with a furnace heat, on to the point,
 Whereon I stood. At once that sea of vapour
 Parted away, and melting into air
 Rose round me, and I stood involved in light,
 As if a flame had kindled up, and wrapped me
 In its innocuous blaze. Away it rolled,
 Wave after wave. Then climbed the highest rocks,
 Poured over them in surges, and then rushed
 Down glens and valleys, like a wintry torrent
 Dashed instant to the plain. It seemed a moment,
 And they were gone, as if the touch of fire
 At once dissolved them. Then I found myself
 Midway in air ;—ridge after ridge below,
 Descended with their opulence of woods

Even to the dim seen level, where a lake
 Flashed in the sun, and from it wound a line,
 Now silvery bright even to the farthest verge
 Of the encircling hills. A waste of rocks
 Was round me—but below how beautiful,
 How rich the plain—a wilderness of groves
 And ripening harvests ; while the sky of June—
 The soft blue sky of June, and the cool air,
 That makes it then a luxury to live,
 Only to breathe it, and the busy echo
 Of cascades, and the voice of mountain brooks,
 Stole with such gentle meanings to my heart,
 That where I stood seemed Heaven.

DREAMS.

Oh that dreams were not dreams, for mine have been The shadows of my hopes. Thence have I grown
 In love with ideal forms. In youth I saw
 Most beauteous beings in mine hours of sleep—
 Fair maidens with their bright and sunny locks
 Falling o'er necks whose hue was of the snow,
 O'er bosoms whose soft throbbings not the veil
 Of gossamer could hide from the tranced eye.
 I saw, when that my cheek had lost its down,
 And I wrote MAN, a world of glittering words
 Writ by the hand of health upon that leaf

Of human life. I saw bright swords, brave plumes,
 And staves of office—robes of honour—all
 That speak of high employment, and awards
 Of national emprises. Other thoughts
 That were by day, hopes, and in slumber, dreams, Came to me, of my line continued in Illustrious heirs. The boy upon my knee
 Became a Socrates, and he who played
 With the dark ringlets on his mother's brow,
 The saviour of a realm. The little maid
 Who, lost in mimic tenderness, caressed
 A pasteboard emblem of our helpless state,
 I wedded to a warrior, sworn and pledged
 To die as had his fathers, at the call
 Of liberty.

Time flew, and I am now
 An aged man with hoary hair, and step
 All trembling; yet I entertain a crowd
 Of dreams, but they are of the world whereto
 Age, and hopes crushed are hurrying me. I see
 In slumber an offended God, begirt
 With Cherubim around his hidden throne,—
 And angels of his attributes, the guards
 Of his dominions. They who represent
 Truth, Peace, and Justice ask the darker doom
 Upon my head, for I had wildly erred;
 But Mercy, darling child of the Most High,
 Pleads for me, and prevails. I hear a voice
 Ring through the spheres of heaven—a voice of love
 Pronouncing pardon, and I join the choir
 That worships, and shall worship him eternally.

DREAM OF THE SEA.

I dreamt that I went down into the sea
Unpained amid the waters—and a world
Of splendid wrecks, formless and numberless,
Broke on my vision. It did seem the skies
Were o'er me pure as infancy—yet waves
Did rattle round my head, and fill mine ears
Like the measureless roar of the far fight
When battle has set up her trumpet shout!
I seemed to breathe the air; and yet the sea
Kept dallying with my life as I sunk down.
'T was in the fitful fashion of a dream—
Water and air—walking, and yet no earth.
The deep seemed bare and dry—and yet I went
With a rude dashing round my reeking face,
Until my outstretched and trembling feet
Stood still upon a bed of glittering pearls!
The hot sun was right over me, at noon—
Sudden it withered up the ocean—till
I seemed amidst a waste of shapeless clay.
A thousand bones were whitening in his rays,
Mass upon mass,—confused and without end.
I walked on the parched wilderness, and saw
The hopeless beauty of a lifeless world!
Wealth that once made some poor vain heart grow light
And leap with it into the flood, was there
Clutched in the last mad agony. And gold
That makes of life a happiness and curse—

That vaunts on earth its brilliancy, lay here—
 An outcast tyrant in his loneliness—
 Beggared by jewels that ne'er shone through blood
 Upon the brow of kings ! Here there were all
 The bright beginnings and the costly ends,
 Which envied man enjoys and expiates,— Splendour, and death—silence, and human hopes—
 Gems, and smooth bones—life's pageantry ! the cross
 That thought to save some wretch in his late need
 Hugged in its last idolatry—all, all
 Lay here in deathly brotherhood—no breath—
 No sympathy—no sound—no motion—and no hope !
 I stood and listened,—
 The eternal flood rushed to its desolate grave !
 And I could hear above me all the waves
 Go bellowing to their bounds ! Still I strode on,
 Journeying amid the brightest of earth's things
 Where yet was never life, nor hope, nor joy !
 My eye could not but look, and my ear hear ;
 For now strange sights, and beautiful, and rare,
 Seemed ordered from the deep through the rich prism
 Above me—and sounds undulated through
 The surges, till my soul grew mad with visions !
 Beneath the canopy of waters I could see
 Palaces and cities crumbled—and the ships
 Sunk in the engorging whirlpool, while the laugh
 Of revelry went wild along their decks, and ere
 The oath was strangled in their swollen throats ;—
 For there they lay, just hurried to one grave
 With horrible contortions and fixed eyes

Waving among the cannon, as the surge
 Would slowly lift them—and their streaming hair
 Twining around the blades that were their pride.

And there were two locked in each others arms,
 And they were lovers !
 Oh God, how beautiful ! cheek to cheek
 And heart to heart upon that splendid deep,
 A bridal bed of pearls !—a burial
 Worthy of two so young and innocent.
 And they did seem to lie there, like two gems
 The fairest in the halls of ocean—both Sepulchred in love—a tearless death—one look,
 One wish, one smile, one mantle for their shroud,
 One hope, one kiss—and that not yet quite cold !
 How beautiful to die in such fidelity !
 E'er yet the curse has ripened, or the heart
 Begins to hope for death as for a joy,
 And feels its streams grow thicker, till they cloy
 With wishes that have sickened and grown old.
 I saw their cheeks were pure and passionless,
 And all their love had passed into a smile,
 And in that smile they died !

Sudden a battle rolled above my head,
 And there came down a flash into the deep
 Illumining its dim chambers—and it past ;
 The waters shuddered—and a thousand sounds
 Sung hellish echoes through the caverned waste.
 The blast was screaming on the upper wave,

And as I looked above me I could see
 The ships go booming through the murky storm,
 Sails rent—masts staggering—and a spectre crew,— Blood mingled with the foam bathing their bows,—
 And I could hear their shrieks as they went on Crying of murder to their bloody foes !

A form shot downward close at my feet ;
 His hand still grasped the steel—and his red eye
 Was full of curses even in his death ;—
 For he had been flung into the abyss
 By fellow men before his heart was cold !

Again I stood beside the lovely pair ;—
 The storm and conflict were as they'd not been.
 I stood and shrieked and laughed, and yet no voice,
 That I could hear, came in my madness ;—
 It hardly seemed that they were dead—so calm,
 So beautiful ! the sea-stars round them shone,
 Like emblems of their souls so cold and pure !
 The bending grass wept silent over them,
 Truer than any friend on earth—their tomb
 The jewelry of the ocean, and their dirge
 The everlasting music of its roar.

I seemed to stand wretched in dreamy thought,
 Cursing the constancy of human hearts
 And vanity of human hopes—and felt
 As I have felt on earth in my sick hours ;—
 How thankless was this legacy of breath

To those who knew the wo of a scathed brain!
 Oh ocean—ocean! if thou coverest up
 The ruins of a proud and broken soul
 And giv'st such peace and solitude as this,
 Thy depths are heaven to man's ingratitude!

I seemed to struggle in an agony;
 My streaming tears gushed out to meet the wave;
 I woke in terror, and the beaded sweat
 Coursed down my temples like a very rain
 As though I had just issued from the sea!

THE MYTHOLOGY OF GREECE.

There was a time, when the o'erhanging sky,
 And the fair earth with its variety,
 Mountain and valley, continent and sea,
 Were not alone the unmoving things that lie
 Slumbering beneath the sun's unclouded eye;
 But every fountain had its spirit then,
 That held communion oft with holy men,
 And frequent from the heavenward mountain came Bright creatures, hovering round on wings of flame,
 And some mysterious sybil darkly gave Responses from the dim and hidden cave:—
 Voices were heard waking the silent air,
 A solemn music echoed from the wood,

And often from the bosom of the flood
 Came forth a sportive Naiad passing fair,
 The clear drops twinkling in her braided hair ;
 And as the hunter through the forest strayed,
 Quick-glancing beauty shot across the glade,
 Her polished arrow levelled on her bow,
 Ready to meet the fawn or bounding roe ;
 And often on the mountain tops the horn
 Rang round the rocky pinnacles, and played
 In lighter echoes from the chequered shade,
 Where through the silvery leaves at early morn
 Stole the slant sunbeams, shedding on the grass
 Brightness, that quivered with the quivering mass
 Of thickly arching foliage ;—often there
 Dian and all her troop of girls were seen
 Dancing by moonlight on the dewy green,
 When the cool night-wind through the forest blew,
 And every leaf in tremulous glances flew ;
 And in the cloudless fields of upper air,
 With coldly pale and melancholy smile
 The moon looked down on that bright spot, the while,
 Which in the depth of darkness shone as fair,
 As in lone southern seas a palmy isle ;
 And when a hunter-boy, who far away
 Had wandered through the wild-wood from his home,
 Led by the eagerness of youth to roam,
 Buried in deep unbroken slumber lay,—
 Then as the full moon poured her mellow light
 Full on the mossy pillow where he slept,
 One more than nymph, in sylvan armour dight,

Bent fondly over him, and smiled, and wept.
 Each lonely spot was hallowed then—the oak
 That o'er the village altar hung, would tell
 Strange hidden things ;—the old remembered well,
 How from its gloom a spirit often spoke.
 There was not then a fountain or a cave,
 But had its reverend oracle, and gave Responses to the fearful crowd, who came
 And called the indwelling Deity by name ;
 Then every snowy peak, that lifted high
 Its shadowy cone to meet the bending sky,
 Stood like a heaven of loveliness and light ;—
 And as the gilt cloud rolled its glory by,
 Chariots and steeds of flame stood harnessed there,
 And gods came forth and seized the golden reins,
 Shook the bright scourge, and through the boundless air
 Rode over starry fields and azure plains.
 It was a beautiful and glorious dream,
 Such as would kindle high the soul of song ;
 The bard, who struck his harp to such a theme,
 Gathered new beauty as he moved along—
 His way was now through wilds and beds of flowers ;
 Rough mountains met him now, and then again
 Gay valleys hung with vines in woven bowers
 Led to the bright waves of the purple main.
 All seemed one bright enchantment then ;—but now,
 Since the long sought for goal of truth is won,
 Nature stands forth unveiled with cloudless brow,
 On earth ONE SPIRIT OF LIFE, in heaven ONE SUN.

A HYMN.

The groves were God's first temples. Ere man learned
To hew the shaft, and lay the architrave,
And spread the roof above them,—ere he framed
The lofty vault, to gather and roll back
The sound of anthems ; in the darkling wood,
Amidst the cool and silence, he knelt down
And offered to the Mightiest, solemn thanks
And supplication. For his simple heart
Might not resist the sacred influences,
That, from the stilly twilight of the place,
And from the gray old trunks that high in heaven
Mingled their mossy boughs, and from the sound
Of the invisible breath that swayed at once
All their green tops, stole o'er him, and bowed
His spirit with the thought of boundless power
And inaccessible majesty. Ah, why Should we, in the world's riper years, neglect
God's ancient sanctuaries, and adore
Only among the crowd, and under roofs
That our frail hands have raised. Let me, at least,
Here, in the shadow of this aged wood,
Offer one hymn—thrice happy, if it find Acceptance in his ear.

Father, thy hand
Hath reared these venerable columns, thou
Didst weave this verdant roof. Thou didst look down

Upon the naked earth, and, forthwith, rose
 All these fair ranks of trees. They, in thy sun,
 Budded, and shook their green leaves in thy breeze,
 And shot towards heaven. The century-living crow
 Whose birth was in their tops, grew old and died
 Among their branches, till, at last, they stood,
 As now they stand, massy and tall and dark,
 Fit shrine for humble worshipper to hold
 Communion with his Maker. Here are seen
 No traces of man's pomp or pride ;—no silks
 Rustle, no jewels shine, nor envious eyes
 Encounter ; no fantastic carvings show
 The boast of our vain race to change the form
 Of thy fair works. But thou art here—thou fill'st
 The solitude. Thou art in the soft winds
 That run along the summits of these trees
 In music ;—thou art in the cooler breath,
 That, from the inmost darkness of the place,
 Comes, scarcely felt ;—the barky trunks, the ground,
 The fresh moist ground, are all instinct with thee.
 Here is continual worship ;—nature, here,
 In the tranquillity that thou dost love,
 Enjoys thy presence. Noiselessly, around,
 From perch to perch, the solitary bird
 Passes ; and yon clear spring, that, 'midst its herbs,
 Wells softly forth and visits the strong roots
 Of half the mighty forest, tells no tale
 Of all the good it does. Thou hast not left
 Thyself without a witness, in these shades,
 Of thy perfections. Grandeur, strength, and grace

Are here to speak of thee. This mighty oak—
 By whose immoveable stem I stand and seem Almost annihilated—not a prince,
 In all the proud old world beyond the deep,
 E'er wore his crown as loftily as he Wears the green coronal of leaves with which Thy hand has graced him. Nestled at his root
 Is beauty, such as blooms not in the glare
 Of the broad sun. That delicate forest flower,
 With scented breath, and look so like a smile,
 Seems, as it issues from the shapeless mould,
 An emanation of the indwelling Life,
 A visible token of the upholding Love,
 That are the soul of this wide universe.

My heart is awed within me, when I think
 Of the great miracle that still goes on,
 In silence, round me—the perpetual work
 Of thy creation, finished, yet renewed
 Forever. Written on thy works I read
 The lesson of thy own eternity.
 Lo! all grow old and die—but see, again,
 How on the faltering footsteps of decay
 Youth possess—ever gay and beautiful youth
 In all its beautiful forms. These lofty trees
 Wave not less proudly that their ancestors
 Moulder beneath them. Oh, there is not lost
 One of earth's charms: upon her bosom yet,
 After the flight of untold centuries,
 The freshness of her far beginning lies

And yet shall lie. Life mocks the idle hate
 Of his arch enemy Death—yea—seats himself
 Upon the sepulchre, and blooms and smiles,
 And of the triumphs of his ghastly foe
 Makes his own nourishment. For he came forth
 From thine own bosom, and shall have no end.

There have been holy men who hid themselves
 Deep in the woody wilderness, and gave Their lives to thought and prayer, till they outlived
 The generation born with them, nor seemed Less aged than the hoary trees and rocks
 Around them ;—and there have been holy men
 Who deemed it were not well to pass life thus.
 But let me often to these solitudes
 Retire, and in thy presence reassure
 My feeble virtue. Here its enemies,
 The passions, at thy plainer footsteps shrink
 And tremble and are still. Oh God ! when thou
 Dost scare the world with tempests, sett'st on fire
 The heavens with falling thunderbolts, or fill'st
 With all the waters of the firmament
 The swift dark whirlwind that uproots the woods
 And drowns the villages ; when, at thy call,
 Uprises the great deep and throws himself
 Upon the continent and overwhelms
 Its cities—who forgets not, at the sight
 Of these tremendous tokens of thy power,
 His pride, and lays his strifes and follies by ?
 Oh, from these sterner aspects of thy face

Spare me and mine, nor let us need the wrath
 Of the mad unchained elements to teach
 Who rules them. Be it ours to meditate
 In these calm shades thy milder majesty,
 And, to the beautiful order of thy works,
 Learn to conform the order of our lives.

THANKSGIVING.

When first in ancient time, from Jubal's tongue
 The tuneful anthem filled the morning air,
 To sacred hymnings and elysian song
 His music-breathing shell the minstrel woke.
 Devotion breathed aloud from every chord :—
 The voice of praise was heard in every tone,
 And prayer, and thanks to Him, the eternal one,—
 To Him, that with bright inspiration touched
 The high and gifted lyre of heavenly song,
 And warmed the soul with new vitality.
 A stirring energy through nature breathed :—
 The voice of adoration from her broke
 Swelling aloud in every breeze, and heard
 Long in the sullen waterfall,—what time
 Soft Spring or hoary Autumn threw on earth
 Its bloom or blighting,—when the Summer smiled,
 Or Winter o'er the year's sepulchre mourned.
 The Deity was there !—a nameless spirit

Moved in the hearts of men to do him homage ;
 And when the morning smiled, or evening pale
 Hung weeping o'er the melancholy urn,
 They came beneath the broad o'erarching trees,
 And in their tremulous shadow worshipped oft,
 Where the pale vine clung round their simple altars,
 And gray moss mantling hung. Above was heard
 The melody of winds, breathed out as the green trees
 Bowed to their quivering touch in living beauty,
 And birds sang forth their cheerful hymns. Below,
 The bright and widely wandering rivulet
 Struggled and gushed amongst the tangled roots,
 That choked its reedy fountain—and dark rocks
 Worn smooth by the constant current. Even there
 The listless wave, that stole with mellow voice
 Where reeds grew rank upon the rushy brink,
 And to the wandering wind the green sedge bent,
 Sang a sweet song of fixed tranquillity.
 Men felt the heavenly influence—and it stole
 Like balm into their hearts, till all was peace ;
 And even the air they breathed,—the light they saw,— Became religion ;—for the ethereal spirit,
 That to soft music wakes the chords of feeling
 And mellows every thing to beauty, moved
 With cheering energy within their breasts,
 And made all holy there—for all was love.
 The morning stars, that sweetly sang together—
 The moon, that hung at night in the mid-sky—
 Dayspring—and eventide—and all the fair
 And beautiful forms of nature, had a voice

Of eloquent worship. Ocean with its tides
 Swelling and deep, where low the infant storm
 Hung on his dun, dark cloud, and heavily beat
 The pulses of the sea,—sent forth a voice
 Of awful adoration to the spirit,
 That, wrapt in darkness, moved upon its face.
 And when the bow of evening arched the east,
 Or, in the moonlight pale, the gentle wave
 Kissed with a sweet embrace the sea-worn beach,
 And the wild song of winds came o'er the waters,
 The mingled melody of wind and wave
 Touched like a heavenly anthem on the ear;
 For it arose a tuneful hymn of worship.
 And have our hearts grown cold? Are there on earth
 No pure reflections caught from heavenly love?—
 Have our mute lips no hymn—our souls no song?
 Let him, that in the summer-day of youth
 Keeps pure the holy fount of youthful feeling,—
 And him, that in the nightfall of his years
 Lies down in his last sleep, and shuts in peace
 His weary eyes on life's short wayfaring,
 Praise Him, that rules the destiny of man.

SPRING.

Again the infant flowers of Spring
Call thee to sport on thy rainbow wing—
Spirit of Beauty ! the air is bright
With the boundless flow of thy mellow light ;
The woods are ready to bud and bloom,
And are weaving for Summer their quiet gloom ;
The tufted brook reflects, as it flows,
The tips of the half-unopened rose,
And the early bird, as he carols free,
Sings to his little love and thee.

See how the clouds, as they fleetly pass,
Throw their shadowy veil on the darkening grass ;
And the pattering showers and stealing dews,
With their starry gems and skyey hues,
From the oozy meadow, that drinks the tide,
To the sheltered vale on the mountain side,
Wake to a new and fresher birth
The tenderest tribes of teeming earth,
And scatter with light and dallying play
Their earliest flowers on the Zephyr's way.

He comes from the mountain's piny steep,
For the long boughs bend with a silent sweep,
And his rapid steps have hurried o'er
The grassy hills to the pebbly shore ;
And now, on the breast of the lonely lake,

The waves in silvery glances break,
 Like a short and quickly rolling sea,
 When the gale first feels its liberty,
 And the flakes of foam, like coursers, run,
 Rejoicing beneath the vertical sun.

He has crossed the lake, and the forest heaves,
 To the sway of his wings, its billowy leaves,
 And the downy tufts of the meadow fly
 In snowy clouds, as he passes by,
 And softly beneath his noiseless tread
 The odorous spring-grass bends its head ;
 And now he reaches the woven bower,
 Where he meets his own beloved flower,
 And gladly his wearied limbs repose,
 In the shade of the newly-opening rose.

SONNET.

They talk of short-lived pleasure—be it so—
 Pain dies as quickly : stern hard-featured pain
 Expires, and lets her weary prisoner go.
 The fiercest agonies have shortest reign ;
 And, after dreams of horror, comes again
 The welcome morning with its rays of peace.
 Oblivion, softly wiping out the stain,
 Makes the strong secret pangs of shame to cease :

Remorse is virtue's root ; its fair increase
 Are fruits of innocence and blessedness :
 Thus joy, o'erborne and bound, doth still release,
 His young limbs from the chains that round him press.
 Weep not that the world changes—did it keep
 A stable changeless state, 'twere cause indeed to weep.

Yet one smile more, departing distant sun !
 One mellow smile through the soft vapoury air,
 Ere, o'er the frozen earth, the loud winds run,
 Or snows are sifted o'er the meadows bare.
 One smile on the brown hills and naked trees,
 And the dark rocks whose summer wreaths are cast,
 And the blue Gentian flower, that, in the breeze,
 Nods lonely, of her beautiful race the last.
 Yet a few sunny days, in which the bee
 Shall murmur by the hedge that skirts the way,
 The cricket chirp upon the russet lea,
 And man delight to linger in thy ray.
 Yet one rich smile, and we will try to bear
 The piercing winter frost, and winds, and darkened air.

SUNRISE ON THE HILLS.

I stood upon the hills, when heaven's wide arch
 Was glorious with the sun's returning march,
 And woods were brightened, and soft gales
 Went forth to kiss the sun-clad vales.
 The clouds were far beneath me :—bathed in light
 They gathered mid-way round the wooded height,
 And in their fading glory shone
 Like hosts in battle overthrown,
 As many a pinnacle with shifting glance,
 Through the gray mist thrust up its shattered lance,
 And rocking on the cliff was left
 The dark pine blasted, bare, and cleft.
 The veil of cloud was lifted,—and below
 Glowed the rich valley, and the river's flow
 Was darkened by the forest's shade,
 Or glistened in the white cascade,
 Where upward in the mellow blush of day
 The noisy bittern wheeled his spiral way.

I heard the distant waters dash—
 I saw the current whirl and flash—
 And richly by the blue lake's silver beach
 The woods were bending with a silent reach.
 Then o'er the vale with gentle swell
 The music of the village bell
 Came sweetly to the echo-giving hills,
 And the wild horn, whose voice the woodland fills,

Was ringing to the merry shout
 That faint and far the glen sent out,
 Where, answering to the sudden shot, thin smoke
 Through thick-leaved branches from the dingle broke.

If thou art worn and hard beset
 With sorrows that thou wouldst forget,—
 If thou wouldst read a lesson that will keep Thy heart from fainting and thy soul from sleep,
 Go to the woods and hills!—no tears
 Dim the sweet look that nature wears.

THE SPIRIT OF BEAUTY.

The Spirit of Beauty unfurls her light,
 And wheels her course in a joyous flight :
 I know her track through the balmy air,
 By the blossoms that cluster and whiten there ;
 She leaves the tops of the mountains green,
 And gems the valley with crystal sheen.

At morn, I know where she rested at night,
 For the roses are gushing with dewy delight ;
 Then she mounts again, and around her flings
 A shower of light from her purple wings,
 Till the spirit is drunk with the music on high,
 That silently fills it with ecstasy !

At noon, she hies to a cool retreat,
 Where bowering elms over waters meet;
 She dimples the wave, where the green leaves dip,
 That smiles, as it curls, like a maiden's lip,
 When her tremulous bosom would hide, in vain,
 From her lover, the hope that she loves again.

At eve, she hangs o'er the western sky .
 Dark clouds for a glorious canopy ;
 And round the skirts of each sweeping fold,
 She paints a border of crimson and gold,
 Where the lingering sunbeams love to stay,
 When their god in his glory has passed away.

She hovers around us at twilight hour,
 When her presence is felt with the deepest power ;
 She mellows the landscape, and crowds the stream
 With shadows that flit like a fairy dream :—
 Still wheeling her flight through the gladsome air,
 The Spirit of Beauty is every where !

SONG.

'Tis the season of tender delight,—
 The season of fresh-springing flowers ;
 Young Spring in the joy of her beauty is bright,
 And leads on the rapturous hours ;

Fair nature is loud in her transport of pleasure,
 The woods and the valleys re-echo her lay ;
 The robin now warbles his love-breathing measure,
 And scatters the blossoms while tilting the spray ;
 One impulse of tenderness thrills through the groves,
 While the birds carol sweetly their innocent loves.

How mild is the Zephyr that blows !

What fragrance his balmy wings bear—
 He breaths as if fearful to brush from the rose
 The dew-drops so tremulous there !
 The stream flowing gently beside the green cresses
 So lightsofely dashes their tendrils away—
 It seems some fond mother, who while she caresses,
 Would sportfully chide her young children at play.
 Hear the minstrel-bee lulling the blossoms to rest,
 For the nectar he sips as the wild-flowers' guest !

Look out then on Nature awhile,

Observe her inviting thee now,— Benevolence beams in her sunshiny smile,
 And blandishment sits on her brow :
 Come stray with me, love, where the fountains are flowing,
 And wild-flowers clustre to drink of the stream ;
 While watching the lily and daffodil blowing,
 No moment of bliss shall so exquisite seem ;
 When nature invites thee, oh ! why then delay ;
 While Joy is still waking, away ! love, away !

SONG OF THE GRECIAN AMAZON.

I buckle to my slender side
The pistol and the scimeter,
And in my maiden flower and pride
Am come to share the tasks of war.
And yonder stands my fiery steed,
That paws the ground and neighs to go,
My charger of the Arab breed,—
I took him from the routed foe.

My mirror is the mountain spring,
At which I dress my ruffled hair ;
My dimmed and dusty arms I bring,
And wash away the blood-stain there.
Why should I guard, from wind and sun,
This cheek, whose virgin rose is fled,
It was for one—oh, only one—
I kept its bloom, and he is dead.

But they who slew him—unaware
Of coward murderers lurking nigh—
And left him to the fowls of air,
Are yet alive—and they must die.
They slew him—and my virgin years
Are vowed to Greece and vengeance now ;
And many an Othman dame, in tears,
Shall rue the Grecian maiden's vow.

I touched the lute in better days,
 I led in dance the joyous band ;—
 Ah! they may move to mirthful lays
 Whose hands can touch a lover's hand.
 The march of hosts that haste to meet
 Seems gayer than the dance to me ;
 The lute's sweet tones are not so sweet
 As the fierce shout of victory.

HYMN OF THE MORAVIAN NUNS

AT THE CONSECRATION OF PULASKI'S BANNER.

The standard of Count Pulaski, the noble Pole who fell in the attack upon Savannah, during the American Revolution, was of crimson silk, embroidered by the Moravian Nuns of Bethlehem in Pennsylvania.

When the dying flame of day
 Through the chancel shot its ray,
 Far the glimmering tapers shed
 Faint light on the cowed head,
 And the censer burning swung,
 Where before the altar hung
 That proud banner, which with prayer
 Had been consecrated there.
 And the nuns' sweet hymn was heard the while,
 Sung low in the dim mysterious aisle.

Take thy banner!—may it wave
 Proudly o'er the good and brave,
 When the battle's distant wail
 Breaks the sabbath of our vale,—
 When the clarion's music thrills
 To the hearts of these lone hills,—
 When the spear in conflict shakes,
 And the strong lance shivering breaks.

Take thy banner!—and beneath
 The war-cloud's encircling wreath,
 Guard it—till our homes are free—
 Guard it—God will prosper thee!
 In the dark and trying hour,
 In the breaking forth of power,
 In the rush of steeds and men,
 His right hand will shield thee then.

Take thy banner! But when night
 Closes round the ghastly fight,
 If the vanquished warrior bow,
 Spare him!—by our holy vow,
 By our prayers and many tears,
 By the mercy that endears,
 Spare him—he our love hath shared—
 Spare him—as thou wouldst be spared!

Take thy banner!—and if e'er
 Thou shouldst press the soldier's bier,
 And the muffled drum should beat

To the tread of mournful feet,
 Then this crimson flag shall be Martial cloak and shroud for thee !

And the warrior took that banner proud,
 And it was his martial cloak and shroud.

LOVE ASLEEP.

Wake him not, he dreams of bliss ;
 His little lips put forth a kiss ;
 His arms, entwined in virgin grace,
 Seem linked in beautiful embrace.

He smiles,—and on his opening lip
 Might saints refresh and angels sip ;
 He blushes,—’tis the rosy light
 That morning wears on leaving night.

He sighs,—’tis not the sigh of wo ;
 He only sighs that he may know
 If kindred sighs another move ;
 For mutual sighs are signs of love.

He speaks,—it is his dear one’s name ;
 He whispers,— still it is the same ;
 The imprisoned accents strive in vain,
 They murmur through his lips again.

He wakes ! the silly little boy,
 To break the mirror thus of joy ;
 He wakes to sorrow, and in pain ;
 Oh ! Love, renew thy dreams again.

SONG.

Dost thou idly ask to hear
 At what gentle seasons
 Nymphs relent, when lovers near Press the tenderest reasons ?
 Ah, they give their faith too oft
 To the careless wooer ;
 Maidens' hearts are always soft,
 Would that men's were truer !

Woo the fair one, when around
 Early birds are singing ;
 When, o'er all the fragrant ground,
 Early herbs are springing :
 When the brookside, bank and grove,
 All with blossoms laden,
 Shine with beauty, breathe of love,—
 Woo the timid maiden.

Woo her, when, with rosy blush,
 Summer eve is sinking ;
 When, on rills that softly gush,
 F

Stars are softly winking ;
 When, through boughs that knit the bower,
 Moonlight gleams are stealing ;
 Woo her, till the gentle hour
 Wakes a gentler feeling.

Woo her, when autumnal dyes
 Tinge the woody mountain ;
 When the dropping foliage lies,
 In the half-choked fountain ;
 Let the scene, that tells how fast
 Youth is passing over,
 Warn her, ere her bloom is past,
 To secure her lover.

Woo her, when the northwinds call
 At the lattice nightly ;
 When, within the cheerful hall,
 Blaze the faggots brightly ;
 While the wintry tempest round
 Sweeps the landscape hoary,
 Sweeter in her ear shall sound
 Love's delightful story.

THE GRECIAN PARTIZAN.

Our free flag is dancing,
 In the free mountain air,
 And burnished arms are glancing,

And warriors mustering there ;
 And true and brave, though passing few,
 Are they whose bosoms shield it ;—
 Their life-blood shall its folds bedew
 Ere to the foe they yield it.
 Each dark eye is fixed on earth,
 And brief each solemn greeting ;—
 There is no look or sound of mirth
 Where those stern men are meeting.

They go to the slaughter,
 To strike the sudden blow,
 And pour on earth, like water,
 The best blood of the foe ;
 To rush on them from rock and height,
 And clear the narrow valley,
 Or fire their camp, at dead of night,
 And fly before they rally.
 Chains are round our country prest,
 And cowards have betrayed her,
 And we must make her bleeding breast
 The grave of the invader.

Not till from her fetters
 We raise up Greece again,
 And write, in bloody letters,
 That tyranny is slain,—
 Oh, not till then the smile shall steal
 Across those darkened faces,
 Nor one of all those warriors feel

His children's dear embraces.
Leave unreaped the ripened wheat,
Till yonder hosts are flying,
And all their bravest, at our feet,
Like autumn sheaves are lying.

THE INDIAN HUNTER.

When the summer harvest was gathered in,
And the sheaf of the gleaner grew white and thin,
And the ploughshare was in its furrow left,
Where the stubble land had been lately cleft,
An Indian hunter, with unstrung bow,
Looked down where the valley lay stretched below.

He was a stranger there, and all that day
Had been out on the hills, a perilous way,
But the foot of the deer was far and fleet,
And the wolf kept aloof from the hunter's feet,
And bitter feelings passed o'er him then,
As he stood by the populous haunts of men.

The winds of autumn came over the woods
As the sun stole out from their solitudes,
The moss was white on the maple's trunk,
And dead from its arms the pale vine shrunk,
And ripened the mellow fruit hung, and red
Were the tree's withered leaves round it shed.

The foot of the reaper moved slow on the lawn,
 And the sickle cut down the yellow corn,—
 The mower sung loud by the meadow side,
 Where the mists of evening were spreading wide,
 And the voice of the herdsman came up the lea,
 And the dance went round by the greenwood tree.

Then the hunter turned away from that scene,
 Where the home of his fathers once had been,
 And heard by the distant and measured stroke,
 That the woodman hewed down the giant oak,
 And burning thoughts flashed over his mind
 Of the white man's faith, and love unkind.

The moon of the harvest grew high and bright,
 As her golden horn pierced the cloud of white,—
 A footstep was heard in the rustling brake,
 Where the beech overshadowed the misty lake,
 And a mourning voice and a plunge from shore ;—
 And the hunter was seen on the hills no more.

When years had passed on, by that still lake-side
 The fisher looked down through the silver tide,
 And there, on the smooth yellow sand displayed,
 A skeleton wasted and white was laid,
 And 'twas seen, as the waters moved deep and slow
 That the hand was still grasping a hunter's bow.

AN INDIAN STORY.

“I know where the timid fawn abides
 In the depths of the shaded dell,
 Where the leaves are broad and the thicket hides,
 With its many stems and its tangled sides,
 From the eye of the hunter well.

“I know where the young May violet grows,
 In its lone and lowly nook,
 On the mossy bank, where the larch tree throws
 Its broad dark boughs, in solemn repose,
 Far over the silent brook.

“And that timid fawn starts not with fear
 When I steal to her secret bower,
 And that young May violet to me is dear,
 And I visit the silent streamlet near,
 To look on the lovely flower.”

Thus Maquon sings as he lightly walks
 To the hunting ground on the hills;
 'Tis a song of his maid of the woods and rocks,
 With her bright black eyes and long black locks,
 And voice like the music of rills.

He goes to the chase—but evil eyes
 Are at watch in the thicker shades;
 For she was lovely that smiled on his sighs,

And he bore, from a hundred lovers, his prize,
The flower of the forest maids.

The boughs in the morning wind are stirred,
And the woods their song renew,
With the early carol of many a bird,
And the quickened tune of the streamlet heard
Where the hazels trickle with dew.

And Maquon has promised his dark-haired maid,
Ere eve shall redden the sky,
A good red deer from the forest shade,
That bounds with the herd through grove and glade,
At her cabin door shall lie.

The hollow woods, in the setting sun,
Ring shrill with the fire-bird's lay;
And Maquon's sylvan labours are done,
And his shafts are spent, but the spoil they won
He bears on his homeward way.

He stops near his bower—his eye perceives
Strange traces along the ground—
At once, to the earth his burden he heaves,
He breaks through the veil of boughs and leaves,
And gains its door with a bound.

But the vines are torn on its walls that leant,
And all from the young shrubs there
By struggling hands have the leaves been rent,

And there hangs, on the sassafras broken and bent,
One tréss of the well known hair,

But where is she who at this calm hour,
Ever watched his coming to see,
She is not at the door, nor yet in the bower,
He calls—but he only hears on the flower
The hum of the laden bee.

It is not a time for idle grief,
Nor a time for tears to flow,
The horror that freezes his limbs is brief—
He grasps his war axe and bow, and a sheaf
Of darts made sharp for the foe.

And he looks for the print of the ruffian's feet,
Where he bore the maiden away ;
And he darts on the fatal path more fleet
Than the blast that hurries the vapour and sleet
O'er the wild November day.

'T was early Summer when Maquon's bride
Was stolen away from his door ;
But at length the maples in crimson are dyed,
And the grape is black on the cabin side,—
And she smiles at his hearth once more.

But far in a pine grove, dark and cold,
Where the yellow leaf falls not,
Nor the Autumn shines in scarlet and gold,

There lies a hillock of fresh dark mould,
In the deepest gloom of the spot.

And the Indian girls, that pass that way,
Point out the ravisher's grave ;
"And how soon to the bower she loved," they say,
"Returned the maid that was borne away
From Maquon the fond and the brave."

THE SOUL OF SONG.

Where lives the Soul of song ?
Dwells it amid the city's festive halls ?
Where crowd the eager throng,
Or where the wanderer's silent footstep falls ?

Loves it the gay saloon,
Where wine and dances steal away the night,
And bright as summer noon
Burns round the pictured walls a blaze of light ?

Seeks it the public square,
When victory hails the people's chosen son,
And loud applauses there
From lip to lip in emulous greetings run ?

Dwells it amid the host,
Who bear their crimson banners waving high ;

Whose first and only boast
 Draws tears of anguish from the patriot's eye ?

Follows it on the path,
 Where the proud conqueror marches to his home,
 And wearied of his wrath
 Smiles as he steps beneath the imperial dome ?

No—not in festive halls,
 In crowded marts, nor in the gay saloon ;
 Not in the forum falls,
 Nor on the conquering host, the gracious boon ;

But where blue mountains rise
 Silent and calm amid the upper air,
 And pure and cloudless skies
 Bend o'er a world, that lies below as fair ;

But where uncultured plains
 Spread far and wide their beds of grass and flowers,
 And heaven's bright pencil stains
 Clear gems that roll away in silent showers ;

But in the depth of woods,
 Where the slant sunbeam gilds the hoary trees,
 And the soft voice of floods
 Glides on the pinions of the evening breeze ;

But in the broken dell,
 Where the criped ivy curls its tangled vines,

And the wild blossom's bell
 Drops with the dew, that in its hollow shines ;
 But in the gulfy cave,
 Where pours the cascade from the glacier's height,
 And all its waters wave,
 Like rainbows, in their luxury of light ;
 There dwells the Soul of song,—
 It flies not to the city's festive halls,
 But loves to steal along,
 Where the lone wanderer's silent footstep falls,

THE DESOLATE CITY.

I had a vision.—

A city lay before me, desolate,
 And yet not all decayed. A summer sun
 Shone on it from a most ethereal sky,
 And the soft winds threw o'er it such a balm,
 One would have thought it was a sepulchre,
 And this the incense offered to the manes
 Of the departed.

In the light it lay
 Peacefully, as if all its thousands took
 Their afternoon's repose, and soon would wake
 To the loud joy of evening. There it lay,

A city of magnificent palaces,
 And churches, towering more like things of Heaven,
 The glorious fabrics, fancy builds in clouds,
 And shapes on loftiest mountains—bright their domes
 Threw back the living ray, and proudly stood
 Many a statue, looking like the forms
 Of spirits hovering in mid air. Tall trees,
 Cypress and plane, waved over many a hill
 Cumbered with ancient ruins—broken arches,
 And tottering columns—vaults, where never came
 The blessed beam of day, but only lamps
 Shedding a funeral light, were kindled there,
 And gave to the bright frescoes on the walls,
 And the pale statues in their far recesses,
 A dim religious awe. Rudely they lay,
 Scarce marking out to the inquisitive eye
 Their earliest outline. But as desolate
 Slumbered the newer city, though its walls
 Were yet unbroken, and its towering domes
 Had never stooped to ruin. All was still ;
 Hardly the faintest sound of living thing
 Moved through the mighty solitude—and yet
 All wore the face of beauty. Not a cloud
 Hung in the lofty sky, that seemed to rise
 In twofold majesty, so bright and pure,
 It seemed indeed a crystalline sphere—and there
 The sun rode onward in his conquering march
 Serenely glorious. From the mountain heights
 Tinged with the blue of heaven, to the wide sea
 Glassed with as pure a blue, one desolate plain

Spread out, and over it the fairest sky
 Bent round and blessed it. Life was teeming there
 In all its lower forms, a wilderness
 Of rank luxuriance ; flowers, and purpling vines
 Matted with deepest foliage, hid the ruins,
 And gave the semblance of a tangled wood
 To piles, that once were loudly eloquent
 With the glad cry of thousands. There were gardens
 Round stateliest villas, full of graceful statues,
 And temples reared to woodland deities ;
 And they were overcrowded with the excess
 Of beauty. All that most is coveted
 Beneath a colder sky, grew wantonly
 And richly there. Myrtles and citrons filled
 The air with fragrance. From the tufted elm,
 Bent with its own too massy foliage, hung
 Clusters of sunny grapes in frosted purple,
 Drinking in spirit from the glowing air,
 And dropping generous dew. The very wind
 Seemed there a lover, and his easy wings
 Fanned the gay bowers, as if in fond delay
 He bent o'er loveliest things, too beautiful
 Ever to know decay. The silent air
 Floating as softly as a cloud of roses,
 Dropped from Idalia in a dewy shower,—
 The air itself seemed like the breath of Heaven
 Filling the groves of Eden. Yet these walls
 Are desolate—not a trace of living man
 Is found amid these glorious works of man,
 And nature's fairer glories. Why should he

Be absent from the festival of life,
 The holiday of nature? Why not come
 To add to the sweet sounds of winds and waters—
 Of winds uttering Æolian melodies
 To the bright, listening flowers, and waters falling
 Most musical from marble fountains wreathed
 With clustering ivy, like a poet's brow—
 Why comes he not to add his higher strains,
 And be the interpreter of lower things,
 In intellectual worship, at the throne
 Of the Beneficent Power, that gave to them
 Their pride and beauty?—"In these palaces,
 These awful temples, these religious caves,
 These hoary ruins, and these twilight groves
 Teeming with life and love,—a secret plague
 Dwells, and the unwary foot, that ventures here, Returns not.—Fly! To linger here is death."

TO GENEVIEVE.

I'll rob the hyacinth and rose,
 I'll search the cowslip's fragrant cell,
 Nor spare the breath that daily blows
 Her incense from the asphodel.

And these shall breathe thy gentle name,
 Sweet Naiad of the sacred stream,

Where, musing, first I caught the flame,
That Passion kindles in his dream.

Thy soul of Music broke the spell,
That bound my lyre's neglected strings ;
Attuned its silent echo's shell,
And loosed again his airy wings.

Ah ! long had beauty's eyes in vain
Diffused their radiant light divine ;
Alas, it never woke a strain,
Till inspiration beamed from thine.

Thus vainly did the stars at night
O'er Memnon's lyre their watch prolong,
When nought but bright Aurora's light
Could wake its silence into song !

THE ANGLER'S SONG.

From the river's plashy bank,
Where the sedge grows green and rank,
And the twisted woodbine springs,
Upward speeds the morning lark
To its silver cloud—and hark !
On his way the woodman sings.

On the dim and misty lakes
 Gloriously the morning breaks,
 And the eagle 's on his cloud :—
 Whilst the wind, with sighing, woos
 To its arms the chaste cold ooze,
 And the rustling reeds pipe loud.

Where the embracing ivy holds
 Close the hoar elm in its folds,
 In the meadow's fenny land,
 And the winding river sweeps
 Through its shallows and still deeps,—
 Silent with my rod I stand.

But when sultry suns are high
 Underneath the oak I lie,
 As it shades the water's edge,
 And I mark my line, away
 In the wheeling eddy, play,
 Tangling with the river sedge.

When the eye of evening looks
 On green woods and winding brooks,
 And the wind sighs o'er the lea,— Woods and streams,—I leave you then,
 While the shadow in the glen Lengthens by the greenwood tree.

HYMN TO THE NORTH STAR.

The sad and solemn night
 Has yet her multitude of cheerful fires ;
 The glorious host of light
 Walk the dark hemisphere till she retires :
 All through her silent watches, gliding slow,
 Her constellations come, and round the heavens, and go.

Day, too, hath many a star
 To grace his gorgeous reign, as bright as they :
 Through the blue fields afar,
 Unseen, they follow in his flaming way.
 Many a bright lingerer, as the eve grows dim,
 Tells what a radiant troop arose and set with him.

And thou dost see them rise,
 Star of the Pole ! and thou dost see them set.
 Alone, in thy cold skies,
 Thou keep'st thy old unmoving station yet,
 Nor join'st the dances of that glittering train,
 Nor dip'st thy virgin orb in the blue western main.

There, at morn's rosy birth,
 Thou lookest meekly through the kindling air,
 And eve, that round the earth
 Chases the day, beholds thee watching there ;
 There noontide finds thee, and the hour that calls
 The shapes of polar flame to scale heaven's azure walls.

Alike, beneath thine eye,
 The deeds of darkness and of light are done ;
 High towards the star-lit sky
 Towns blaze—the smoke of battle blots the sun—
 The night-storm on a thousand hills is loud—
 And the strong wind of day doth mingle sea and cloud.

On thy unaltering blaze
 The half-wrecked mariner, his compass lost,
 Fixes his steady gaze,
 And steers, undoubting, to the friendly coast ;
 And they who stray in perilous wastes, by night,
 Are glad when thou dost shine to guide their footsteps right.

And, therefore, bards of old,
 Sages, and hermits of the solemn wood
 Did in thy beams behold
 A beauteous type of that unchanging good,
 That bright eternal beacon, by whose ray
 The voyager of time should shape his heedful way.

SONG OF THE STARS.

When the radiant morn of creation broke,
 And the world in the smile of God awoke,
 And the empty realms of darkness and death
 Were moved through their depths by his mighty breath,

And orbs of beauty, and spheres of flame,
 From the void abyss, by myriads came,
 In the joy of youth, as they darted away,
 Through the widening wastes of space to play,
 Their silver voices in chorus rung,
 And this was the song the bright ones sung.

Away, away, through the wide, wide sky,
 The fair blue fields that before us lie :
 Each sun with the worlds that round us roll,
 Each planet poised on her turning pole,
 With her isles of green, and her clouds of white,
 And her waters that lie like fluid light.

For the source of glory uncovers his face,
 And the brightness o'erflows unbounded space ;
 And we drink, as we go, the luminous tides
 In our ruddy air and our blooming sides ;
 Lo, yonder the living splendors play !
 Away, on our joyous path away !

Look, look, through our glittering ranks afar,
 In the infinite azure, star after star,
 How they brighten and bloom as they swiftly pass !
 How the verdure runs o'er each rolling mass !
 And the path of the gentle winds is seen,
 Where the small waves dance, and the young woods lean.

And see, where the brighter day-beams pour,
 How the rainbows hang in the sunny shower ;
 And the morn and the eve, with their pomp of hues,
 Shift o'er the bright planets and shed their dews ;
 And 'twixt them both, o'er the teeming ground,
 With her shadowy cone, the night goes round.

Away, away !—in our blossoming bowers,
 In the soft air wrapping these spheres of ours,
 In the seas and fountains that shine with morn,
 See, love is brooding, and life is born,
 And breathing myriads are breaking from night,
 To rejoice, like us, in motion and light.

Glide on in your beauty, ye youthful spheres !
 To weave the dance that measures the years.
 Glide on in the glory and gladness sent
 To the farthest wall of the firmament,
 The boundless visible smile of him
 To the veil of whose brow our lamps are dim.

“The memory of joys that are past.”

Ossian.

Where are now the flowers that once detained me
 Like a loiterer on my early way ?
 Where the fragrant wreaths that softly chained me,
 When young life was like an infant's play ?

Were they but the fancied dreams, that hover
 Round the couch where tender hearts repose ?
 Only pictured veils that brightly cover
 With their skyey tints a world of woes ?

They are gone—but Memory loves to cherish
 All their sweetness in her deepest core.
 Ah ! the recollection cannot perish,
 Though the eye may never meet them more.

There are hopes, that like enchantment brighten
 Gaily in the van of coming years ;
 They are never met—and yet they lighten,
 When we walk in sorrow and in tears.

When the present only tells of anguish,
 Then we know their worth, and only then :
 O ! the wasted heart will cease to languish,
 When it thinks of joys that might have been.

Age, and suffering, and want, may sever
 Every link, that bound to life, in twain :
 Hope—even Hope may vanish, but forever
 Memory with her visions will remain.

THE LAPSE OF TIME.

Lament who will, in fruitless tears,
The speed with which our moments fly :
I sigh not over vanished years,
But watch the years that hasten by.

See how they come, a mingled crowd
Of bright and dark, but rapid days ;—
Beneath them, like a summer cloud,
The wide world changes as I gaze.

What ! grieve that time has brought so soon
The sober age of manhood on !
As idly should I weep at noon,
To see the blush of morning gone.

Could I forego the hopes that glow
In prospect, like Elysian isles ?
And let the charming future go,
With all her promises and smiles ?

The future !—cruel were the power
Whose doom would tear thee from my heart.
Thou sweetener of the present hour !
We cannot—no—we will not part.

Oh, leave me, still, the rapid flight
That makes the changing seasons gay,

The grateful speed that brings the night,
The swift and glad return of day ;

The months that touch with lovelier grace
This little prattler at my knee,
In whose arch eye and speaking face
New meaning every hour I see ;

The years that o'er each sister land
Shall lift the country of my birth,
And nurse her strength, till she shall stand
The pride and pattern of the earth ;

Till younger commonwealths, for aid,
Shall cling about her ample robe,
And, from her frown, shall shrink, afraid,
The crowned oppressors of the globe.

True—time will seam and blanch my brow—
Well—I shall sit with aged men,
And my good glass will tell me how
A grisly beard becomes me then.

And should no foul dishonour lie
Upon my head, when I am gray,
Love yet may search my fading eye,
And smoothe the path of my decay.

Then haste thee, time,—'tis kindness all
That speeds thy winged feet so fast ;

Thy pleasures stay not till they pall,
And all thy pains are quickly past.

Thou fliest, and bear'st away our woes ;
And, as thy shadowy train depart,
The memory of sorrow grows
A lighter burden on the heart.

INSCRIPTION.

Stranger, if thou hast ever blest the shade,
That lent thee shelter from the sun or rain,
Thou wilt not rest thee underneath this elm
Without a sense of gratitude. The boughs,
That overshadow thee, have borne the brunt
Of centuries, and have records of the past
In all their whispering leaves. We cannot hear them
Telling their tales, through the long summer day,
To the cool west-wind, and have other thoughts,
Than of the generations, who have sat,
In long succession, on the mossy turf
That beds these twisted roots. Sunshine and calm,
Darkness and storm, have been around these boughs,
And they have smiled to the unclouded sky,
And rocked in the rude tempest, but have stood
Unbroken, while the stream of human life
Has ebb'd and flow'd, like the perpetual tide,

And hardly left a trace upon its shores,
 To tell us where it came. Then rest thee, stranger,
 And think thou hearest in the ancient wood
 A monitor, that warns thee of thy end
 With a low earnest voice, a voice of kindness,
 That, like a silent fountain running over,
 Refreshes where it flows, and, like its waters,
 Gives life to the sere heart it passes by.

SONNET.

TO —

Aye, thou art for the grave ; thy glances shine
 Too brightly to shine long ; another Spring
 Shall deck her for men's eyes,—but not for thine,
 Sealed in a sleep which knows no wakening.
 The fields for thee have no medicinal leaf,
 Nor the vexed ore a mineral of power,
 And they who love thee, wait in anxious grief
 Till the slow plague shall bring the fatal hour.
 Glide softly to thy rest then ; Death should come
 Gently to one of gentle mould like thee,
 As light winds wandering through groves of bloom
 Detach the delicate blossom from the tree.
 Close thy sweet eyes calmly, and without pain ;
 And we will trust in God, to see thee, yet again.

H

SONNET.

Earth holds no fairer, lovelier one than thou,
 Maid of the laughing lip, and frolic eye.
 Innocence sits upon thy open brow,
 Like a pure spirit in its native sky.
 If ever beauty stole the heart away,
 Enchantress, it would fly to meet thy smile ;
 Moments would seem by thee a summer day,
 And all around thee an Elysian isle.
 Roses are nothing to the maiden blush
 Sent o'er thy cheek's soft ivory, and night
 Has nought so dazzling in its world of light,
 As the dark rays that from thy lashes gush.
 Love lurks amid thy silken curls, and lies
 Like a keen archer in thy kindling eyes.

DION'S DREAM.

He lay upon his couch by night,
 Locked fast in sleep ; for he had been Engaged the livelong day in fight
 With warrior-bands of foreign men :
 When, on the moon's declining beam,
 There came the Spirit of a dream.

It breathed upon his face the spell,
Which shows the future and the past,
And bade him note fair Hellas well,
And see her age of glory past.
“And cast thine eyes, chief, west and east,
And tell me, dreamer, what thou seest.”

And Dion saw, and lo! the land,
The land of Greece was free no more ;
But o’er it ruled a turbaned band,
Whose scimitars were red with gore.
And there a Spartan boy, who waits
A bondman at the conqueror’s gates.

He saw her sons the proselytes
Of a pure creed—a faith divine ;
None pay the “Unknown God” high rites,—
His temple holds a holier shrine.
’Tis changed ; alas, at evening there
A Muezzim chants the Moslem prayer.

He saw a wretched peasant stand
Chained to his implements of toil ;
And there are fetters on his hand,
And there are tears, but ne’er a smile.
And oft is upward cast his eye
In prayer to God, that he may die.

He saw a girl with golden locks
And polished brow and azure eye ;

Why roves she o'er the lonely rocks?
 Why all the day long weep and sigh?
 Alas, her loveliness has caught
 A haram's lord, and she is bought.

And o'er the Morea, far and wide,
 The ruthless sons of Islam stand
 With every weapon, hell has tried
 To work the downfall of a land.
 And Dion thus in sorrow slept,
 Then left his couch and sat and wept.

Again he sunk to sleep:—again
 He dreamed. Upon that mount of Thrace,
 Which rises, as 'tis said of men,
 Ten thousand feet above its base,
 He stood, and from the height surveyed
 The changes passing centuries made.

Is that lost Greece he sees below?
 Where is the glittering minaret?
 And where is he, the turbaned foe,
 The Othman surely rules her yet?
 No, rest thee, chief, the Moslem thrones
 Cumber no land that Europe owns.

He sees upon a sunny slope
 All festooned over with the vine,
 A merry, laughing, peasant group,
 Around a vase of China wine.

And much they talk of days gone past,
Ere Despotism breathed his last.

He sees a labouring man at work ;
His children, babes with yellow hair,
Play by, and, fearless of the Turk,
Pursue a young bird fluttering there,
And he, that sire, with soft embrace
Of those dear babes, joins in the chase.

And, emblem of the peace that reigns
Throughout the clime, he sees a maid
Of angel form forsake the plains,
And wander to the mountain's shade,
All lonely, with her father's flocks ;—
For there 's no Turk among these rocks.

What cloud is that, which, girt with wings,
Comes sweeping where proud Corinth smiles ?
No shadowy cloud ; that vessel brings
The dove from far Atlantic isles ;
Lo ! o'er her, with a dark blue blent,
There waves a starry firmament.

The warrior wakes ; there is no cloud
Upon his heart ; the morning sun
Shines through his tent, and fierce and loud
Come shouts, as when the battles 's won.
And little taught by yester night,
The Satrap arms again for fight.

THE GLADIATOR.

They led a lion from his den,
The lord of Afric's sun-scorched plain ;
And there he stood, stern foe of men,
And shook his flowing mane.
There 's not of all Rome's heroes, ten
That dare abide this game.
His bright eye nought of lightning lacked ;
His voice was like the cataract.

They brought a dark-haired man along,
Whose limbs with gyves of brass were bound ;
Youthful he seemed, and bold, and strong,
And yet unscathed of wound.
Blithely he stepped among the throng,
And careless threw around
A dark eye, such as courts the path
Of him, who braves a Dacian's wrath.

Then shouted the plebeian crowd—
Rung the glad galleries with the sound ;
And from the throne there spake aloud
A voice, " Be the bold man unbound !
And, by Rome's sceptre yet unbowed,
By Rome, earth's monarch crowned,
Who dares the bold—the unequal strife,
Though doomed to death, shall save his life."

Joy was upon that dark man's face,
 And thus, with laughing eye, spake he
 "Loose ye the lord of Zaara's waste,
 And let my arms be free ;
 'He has a martial heart,' thou sayest,
 But oh, who will not be
 A hero, when he fights for life,
 And home, and country,—babes, and wife.

And thus I for the strife prepare ;
 The Thracian falchion to me bring ;
 But ask th' imperial leave to spare
 The shield—a useless thing.
 Were I a Samnite's rage to dare,
 Then o'er me should I fling
 The broad orb ; but to lion's wrath
 The shield were but a sword of lath."

And he has bared his shining blade,
 And springs he on the shaggy foe ;
 Dreadful the strife, but briefly played—
 The desert-king lies low,
 His long and loud death-howl is made,
 And there must end the show.
 And when the multitude were calm,
 The favourite freedman took the palm.

"Kneel down, Rome's emperor beside :"
 He knelt, that dark man ;—o'er his brow
 Was thrown a wreath in crimson died,

And fair words gild it now :
 "Thou'rt the bravest youth that ever tried
 To lay a lion low ;
 And from our presence forth thou go'st
 To lead the Dacians of our host."

Then flushed his cheek, but not with pride,
 And grieved and gloomily spoke he :
 "My cabin stands where blithely glide
 Proud Danube's waters to the sea ;
 I have a young and blooming bride,
 And I have children three ;
 No Roman wealth nor rank can give Such joy, as in their arms to live.

My wife sits at the cabin door,
 With throbbing heart and swollen eyes ;
 While tears her cheek are coursing o'er,
 She speaks of sundered ties.
 She bids my tender babes deplore
 The death their father dies ;
 She tells these jewels of my home,
 I bleed to please the rout of Rome.

I cannot let those cherubs stray
 Without their sire's protecting care ;
 And I would chase the griefs away
 Which cloud my wedded fair."
 The monarch spoke, the guards obey,
 And gates unclosed are ;

He is gone—no golden bribes divide
The Dacian from his babes and bride.

TRUE GREATNESS.

There is a fire, that has its birth
Above the proudest hills of earth ;
And higher than the eternal snows,
The fountain whence it rose.

It came to man in ancient days,
And fell upon his ardent gaze,
A god descending in his car,
The Spirit of a star.

And as the glorious vision broke
Full on his eye, at once he woke,
And with the rush of battling steeds
He sprang to generous deeds.

Then first he stood erect and free,
And in the might of destiny
A stern, unconquerable fate
Compelled him to be great.

He strove not for the wreath of fame ;
From heaven, the power that moved him, came,

And welcome, as the mountain air,
The voice that bade him dare.

Onward he bore, and battled still
With a most firm, enduring will,
His only hope, to win and rise,
His only aim—the skies.

He saw their glories blaze afar ;
A soul looked down from every star,
And from its eye of lightning flew
A glance, that thrilled him through.

Full in the front of war he stood ;
His home, his country, claimed his blood :
Without one sigh that blood was given ;
He only thought — of Heaven.

MARCH.

The stormy March is come at last,
With wind and cloud and changing skies,
I hear the rushing of the blast
That through the snowy valley flies.

Ah, passing few are they who speak,
Wild stormy month! in praise of thee ;

Yet, though thy winds are loud and bleak,
Thou art a welcome month to me.

For thou, to northern lands again,
The glad and glorious sun dost bring,
And thou hast joined the gentle train
And wear'st the gentle name of Spring.

And, in thy reign of blast and storm,
Smiles many a long, bright, sunny day,
When the changed winds are soft and warm,
And heaven puts on the blue of May.

Then sing aloud the gushing rills
And the full springs, from frost set free,
That, brightly leaping down the hills,
Are just set out to meet the sea.

The year's departing beauty hides
Of wintry storms the sullen threat;
But, in thy sternest frown, abides
A look of kindly promise yet.

Thou bring'st the hope of those calm skies
And that soft time of sunny showers,
When the wide bloom, on earth that lies,
Seems of a brighter world than ours.

AN APRIL DAY.

When the warm sun, that brings
Seed-time and harvest, has returned again,
'Tis sweet to visit the still wood, where springs
The first flower of the plain.

I love the season well
When forest glades are teeming with bright forms,
Nor dark and many-folded clouds foretell
The coming-in of storms.

From the earth's loosened mould
The sapling draws its sustenance, and thrives:
Though stricken to the heart with winter's cold,
The drooping tree revives.

The softly-warbled song
Comes through the pleasant woods, and coloured wings
Are glancing in the golden sun along
The forest openings.

And when bright sunset fills
The silver woods with light, the green slope throws
Its shadows in the hollows of the hills,
And wide the upland glows.

And when the day is gone,
In the blue lake the sky o'erreaching far

Is hollowed out, and the moon dips her horn,
And twinkles many a star.

Inverted in the tide
Stand the gray rocks, and trembling shadows throw,
And the fair trees look over, side by side,
And see themselves below.

Sweet April!—many a thought
Is wedded unto thee, as hearts are wed;
Nor shall they fail, till to its autumn brought Life's golden fruit is shed.

THE REIGN OF MAY.

I feel a newer life in every gale;
The winds, that fan the flowers,
And with their welcome breathings fill the sail,
Tell of serener hours,—
Of hours that glide unfelt away
Beneath the sky of May.

The spirit of the gentle south-wind calls
From his blue throne of air,
And where his whispering voice in music falls,
Beauty is budding there;
The bright ones of the valley break
Their slumbers and awake.

The waving verdure rolls along the plain,
 And the wide forest weaves,
 To welcome back its playful mates again,
 A canopy of leaves ;
 And from its darkening shadow floats
 A gush of trembling notes.

Fairer and brighter spreads the reign of May ;
 The tresses of the woods,
 With the light dallying of the west-wind play,
 And the full-brimming floods,
 As gladly to their goal they run,
 Hail the returning sun.

AFTER A TEMPEST.

The day had been a day of wind and storm ;—
 The wind was laid, the storm was overpast,—
 And stooping from the zenith, bright and warm,
 Shone the great sun on the wide earth at last.
 I stood upon the upland slope and cast
 My eye upon a broad and beauteous scene,
 Where the vast plain lay girt by mountains vast,
 And hills o'er hills lifted their heads of green,
 With pleasant vales scooped out and villages between.

The rain-drops glistened on the trees around,
 Whose shadows on the tall grass were not stirred,

Save when a shower of diamonds, to the ground,
 Was shaken by the flight of startled bird ;
 For birds were warbling round, and bees were heard
 About the flowers ; the cheerful rivulet sung
 And gossiped, as he hastened ocean-ward ;
 To the gray oak the squirrel, chiding, clung,
 And chirping from the ground the grasshopper up-sprung.

And from beneath the leaves that kept them dry
 Flew many a glittering insect here and there,
 And darted up and down the butterfly,
 That seemed a living blossom of the air.
 The flocks came scattering from the thicket, where
 The violent rain had pent them, in the way
 Strolled groups of damsels frolicsome and fair,
 The farmer swung the scythe or turned the hay,
 And 'twixt the heavy swaths his children were at play.

It was a scene of peace—and, like a spell,
 Did that serene and golden sunlight fall
 Upon the motionless wood that clothed the cell,
 And precipice upspringing like a wall,
 And glassy river and white waterfall,
 And happy living things that trod the bright
 And beauteous scene ; while, far beyond them all,
 On many a lovely valley, out of sight,
 Was poured from the blue heavens the same soft golden light.

I looked, and thought the quiet of the scene
 An emblem of the peace that yet shall be,
 When o'er earth's continents and isles between,
 The noise of war shall cease from sea to sea,
 And married nations dwell in harmony.
 When millions, crouching in the dust to one,
 No more shall beg their lives on bended knee,
 Nor the black stake be dressed, nor in the sun
 The o'erlaboured captive toil, and wish his life were done.

Too long at clash of arms amid her bowers
 And pools of blood, the earth has stood aghast,
 The fair earth, that should only blush with flowers
 And ruddy fruits; but not for aye can last
 The storm, and sweet the sunshine when 'tis past;
 Lo, the clouds roll away—they break—they fly,
 And, like the glorious light of summer, cast
 O'er the wide landscape from the embracing sky,
 On all the peaceful world the smile of heaven shall lie.

SUMMER WIND.

It is a sultry day; the sun has drank
 The dew that lay upon the morning grass,
 There is no rustling in the lofty elm
 That canopies my dwelling, and its shade

Scarce cools me. All is silent save the faint
 And interrupted murmur of the bee,
 Settling on the sick flowers, and then again
 Instantly on the wing. The plants around
 Feel the too potent fervours; the tall maize
 Rolls up its long green leaves; the clover droops
 Its tender foliage, and declines its blooms.
 But far in the fierce sunshine tower the hills,
 With all their growth of woods, silent and stern,
 As if the scorching heat and dazzling light
 Were but an element they loved. Bright clouds, Motionless pillars of the brazen heaven,—
 Their bases on the mountains—their white tops
 Shining in the far ether—fire the air
 With a reflected radiance, and make turn
 The gazer's eye away. For me, I lie
 Languidly in the shade, where the thick turf,
 Yet virgin from the kisses of the sun,
 Retains some freshness, and I woo the wind
 That still delays its coming. Why so slow,
 Gentle and voluble spirit of the air?
 Oh come and breathe upon the fainting earth
 Coolness and life. Is it that in his caves
 He hears me? See, on yonder woody ridge,
 The pine is bending his proud top, and now,
 Among the nearer groves, chesnut and oak
 Are tossing their green boughs about. He comes!
 Lo where the grassy meadow runs in waves!
 The deep distressful silence of the scene
 Breaks up with mingling of unnumbered sounds

And universal motion. He is come,
 Shaking a shower of blossoms from the shrubs
 And bearing on their fragrance ; and he brings
 Music of birds and rustling of young boughs,
 And sound of swaying branches, and the voice
 Of distant waterfalls. All the green herbs
 Are stirring in his breath, a thousand flowers,
 By the road-side and the borders of the brook,
 Nod gaily to each other, glossy leaves
 Are twinkling in the sun, as if the dew
 Were on them yet, and silver waters break
 Into small waves and sparkle as he comes.

AUTUMN.

With what glory comes and goes the year!—
 The buds of spring,—those beautiful harbingers
 Of sunny skies and cloudless times,—enjoy
 Life's newness, and earth's garniture spread out ;
 And when the silver habit of the clouds
 Comes down upon the autumn sun, and with
 A sober gladness the old year takes up
 His bright inheritance of golden fruits,
 A pomp and pageant fill the splendid scene.

There is a beautiful spirit breathing now
 Its mellow richness on the clustered trees,

And from a beaker full of richest dyes
 Pouring new glory on the autumn woods,
 And dipping in warm light the pillared clouds.
 Morn on the mountain, like a summer bird,
 Lifts up her purple wing, and in the vales
 The gentle wind, a sweet and passionate wooer,
 Kisses the blushing leaf, and stirs up life
 Within the solemn woods of ash deep-crimsoned,
 And silver beach, and maple yellow-leaved,—
 Where autumn, like a faint old man, sits down
 By the way-side a-weary. Through the trees
 The golden robin moves ; the purple finch,
 That on wild cherry and red cedar feeds,—
 A winter bird,—comes with its plaintive whistle,
 And pecks by the witch-hazel, whilst aloud
 From cottage roofs the warbling blue-bird sings ;
 And merrily with oft-repeated stroke
 Sounds from the threshing-floor the busy flail.

O what a glory doth this world put on
 For him that with a fervent heart goes forth
 Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
 On duties well performed, and days well spent !
 For him the wind, aye, the yellow leaves
 Shall have a voice, and give him eloquent teachings.—
 He shall so hear the solemn hymn, that Death
 Has lifted up for all, that he shall go
 To his long resting-place without a tear.

MORNING TWILIGHT.

The mountains are blue in the morning air,
And the woods are sparkling with dewy light ;
The winds, as they wind through the hollows, bear
The breath of the blossoms that wake by night.
Wide o'er the bending meadows roll
The mists, like a lightly moving sea ;
The sun is not risen—and over the whole
There hovers a silent mystery.

The pure blue sky is in calm repose ;
The pillowy clouds are sleeping there ;
So stilly the brook in its covert flows,
You would think its murmur a breath of air.
The water that floats in the glassy pool,
Half hid by the willows that line its brink,
In its deep recess has a look so cool,
One would worship its nymph, as he bent to drink.

Pure and beautiful thoughts, at this early hour,
Go off to the home of the bright and blessed ;
They steal on the heart with an unseen power,
And its passionate throbbings are laid at rest :
O ! who would not catch, from the quiet sky
And the mountains that soar in the hazy air,
When his harbinger tells that the sun is nigh,
The visions of bliss that are floating there.

TO A CLOUD.

Beautiful cloud ! with folds so soft and fair,
 Swimming in the pure quiet air !
 Thy fleeces bathed in sunlight, while below
 Thy shadow o'er the vale moves slow :
 Where, 'midst their labour, pause the reaper train
 As cool it comes along the grain.
 Beautiful cloud ! I would I were with thee
 In thy calm way o'er land and sea :
 To rest on thy unrolling skirts, and look
 On Earth as on an open book ;
 On streams that tie her realms with silver bands,
 And the long ways that seam her lands ;
 And hear her humming cities, and the sound
 Of waves that chafe their rocky bound.
 Aye—I would sail upon thy air-borne car
 To blooming regions distant far,
 To where the sun of Andalusia shines
 On his own olive groves and vines,
 Or the soft lights of Italy's bright sky
 In smiles upon her ruins lie.
 But I would woo the winds to let us rest
 O'er Greece long fettered and opprest,
 Whose sons at length have heard the call that comes From the old battle fields and tombs,
 And risen, and drawn the sword, and, on the foe,
 Have dealt the swift and desperate blow,

And the Othman power is cloven, and the stroke
 Has touched its chains, and they are broke.
 Aye, we would linger till the sunset there
 Should come, to purple all the air,
 And thou reflect upon the sacred ground,
 The ruddy radiance streaming round.

Bright meteor ! for the summer noontide made !
 Thy peerless beauty yet shall fade.
 The sun, that fills with light each glistening fold,
 Shall set, and leave thee dark and cold :
 The blast shall rend thy skirts, or thou may'st frown
 In the dark heaven when storms come down,
 And weep in rain, till man's inquiring eye
 Miss thee, forever, from the sky.

AUTUMNAL NIGHTFALL.

Round Autumn's mouldering urn,
 Loud mourns the chill and cheerless gale,
 When nightfall shades the quiet vale,
 And stars in beauty burn.

'Tis the year's eventide.
 The wind,—like one that sighs in pain
 O'er joys that ne'er will bloom again,
 Mourns on the far hill-side.

And yet my pensive eye
Rests on the faint blue mountain long,
And for the fairy-land of song,
That lies beyond, I sigh.

The moon unveils her brow ;
In the mid-sky her urn glows bright,
And in her pale and mellow light
The valley sleeps below.

I stand deep musing here,
Beneath the dark and motionless beech,
Whilst wandering winds of nightfall reach
My melancholy ear.

The air breathes chill and free ;
A Spirit, in soft music, calls
From Autumn's gray and moss-grown halls,
And round her withered tree.

The hoar and mantled oak,
With moss and twisted ivy brown,
Bends in its lifeless beauty down
Where weeds the fountain choke.

Leaves, that the night-wind bears
To earth's cold bosom with a sigh,
Are types of our mortality,
And of our fading years.

The tree that shades the plain,
Wasting and hoar as time decays,
Spring shall renew with cheerful days,—
But not my joys again.

AUTUMN WOODS.

Ere, in the northern gale,
The summer tresses of the trees are gone,
The woods of Autumn, all around our vale,
Have put their glory on.

The mountains that infold
In their wide sweep, the coloured landscape round,
Seem groups of giant kings in purple and gold,
That guard the enchanted ground.

I roam the woods that crown
The upland, where the mingled splendours glow,
Where the gay company of trees look down
On the green fields below.

My steps are not alone
In these bright walks; the sweet southwest, at play,
Flies, rustling, where the painted leaves are strown
Along the winding way.

And far in heaven, the while,
 The sun, that sends that gale to wander here,
 Pours out on the fair earth his quiet smile,—
 The sweetest of the year.

Where now the solemn shade,
 Verdure and gloom where many branches meet ;
 So grateful, when the noon of summer made
 The valleys sick with heat ?

Let in through all the trees
 Come the strange rays ; the forest depths are bright ;
 Their sunny-coloured foliage, in the breeze,
 Twinkles, like beams of light.

The rivulet, late unseen,
 Where bickering through the shrubs its waters run,
 Shines with the image of its golden screen,
 And glimmerings of the sun.

But, 'neath yon crimson tree,
 Lover to listening maid might breathe his flame,
 Nor mark, within its roseate canopy,
 Her blush of maiden shame.

Oh, Autumn ! why so soon
 Depart the hues that make thy forests glad ;
 Thy gentle wind and thy fair sunny noon,
 And leave thee wild and sad !

Ah, 't were a lot too blest
 Forever in thy coloured shades to stray ;
 Amidst the kisses of the soft southwest
 To rove and dream for aye ;

And leave the vain low strife
 That makes men mad—the tug for wealth and power,
 The passions and the cares that wither life,
 And waste its little hour.

AUTUMNAL HYMN OF THE HUSBANDMAN.

Now we rest from our toils, Lord, our labours are done,
 Our meadows are bared to the kiss of the sun ;
 We have winnowed the wheat,—well our toil it repays,
 And our oxen have eaten the husks of the maize.

We gathered our harvests ; with strength in each limb Toiled the mower ; the ripe grass bowed prostrate to him ;

And the reaper, as nimbly he felled the proud grain,
 Was blither than those who wear sceptres and reign.

And the wheat blade was tall, and the full, golden ear
 Proclaimed that the months of rejoicing were near ;
 The grape in rich clusters hung, promising mirth,
 And the boughs of the apple-tree slept on the earth.

Did we thank thee, then, God of the seasons? Oh no!
 We were prompt in accepting thy favours, but slow
 Were our lips to give thanks for the rich gifts, thy hand
 Showered thick on the maize-littered vales of our land.

Thou hast rained on us manna, Lord,—yet we are mute;
 Though summer's all smiles, of thy love are the fruit,
 Springs and autumns, as fair as the Orient boasts,
 Dawn on us,—yet faint are our tongues, Lord of Hosts!

Now we raise our glad voices—in gratitude raise,
 And we waft on the beams of the morning our praise;
 We thank thee for golden grain gathered in shock,
 And the milk of the kine, and the fleece of the flock.

And we thank thee for limbs moving light to the task,
 For hearts beating high, though unwarmed of the flask,
 Fill us, Lord, with just sense of thy bounty, and give Health to us, and to all in the land where we live.

WOODS IN WINTER.

When winter winds are piercing chill,
 And through the white-thorn blows the gale,
 With solemn feet I tread the hill,
 That over-brows the lonely vale.

O'er the bare upland, and away
 Through the long reach of desert woods,
 The embracing sunbeams chastely play,
 And gladden these deep solitudes.

On the gray maple's crusted bark
 Its tender shoots the hoar-frost nips ;
 Whilst in the frozen fountain—hark !
 His piercing beak the bittern dips.

Where, twisted round the barren oak,
 The summer vine in beauty clung,
 And summer winds the stillness broke,—
 The crystal icicle is hung.

Where from their frozen urns mute springs
 Pour out the river's gradual tide,
 Shrilly the skater's iron rings,
 And voices fill the woodland side.

Alas !—how changed from the fair scene,
 When birds sang out their mellow lay ;
 And winds were soft—and woods were green—
 And the song ceased not with the day.

But still wild music is abroad,
 Pale, desert woods ! within your crowd ;
 And gathered winds, in hoarse accord,
 Amid the vocal reeds pipe loud.

Chill airs, and wintry winds ! my ear
 Has grown familiar with your song ;
 I hear it in the opening year—
 I listen, and it cheers me long.

A SONG OF SAVOY.

As the dim twilight shrouds
 The mountain's purple crest,
 And summer's white and folded clouds
 Are glowing in the west,
 Loud shouts come up the rocky dell,
 And voices hail the evening bell.

Faint is the goatherd's song,
 And sighing comes the breeze :
 The silent river sweeps along
 Amid its bending trees,—
 And the full moon shines faintly there,
 And music fills the evening air.

Beneath the waving firs
 The tinkling cymbals sound ;
 And as the wind the foliage stirs,
 I see the dancers bound
 Where the green branches, arched above,
 Bend over this fair scene of love.

And he is there, that sought
 My young heart long ago !
 But he has left me,—though I thought
 He ne'er could leave me so.
 Ah ! lovers' vows,—how frail are they !—
 And his—were made but yesterday.

Why comes he not ? I call
 In tears upon him yet ;—
 'T were better ne'er to love at all,
 Than love, and then forget !
 Why comes he not ? Alas ! I should Reclaim him still, if weeping could.

But see,—he leaves the glade,
 And beckons me away :
 He comes to seek his mountain maid !—
 I cannot chide his stay.
 Glad sounds along the valley swell,
 And voices hail the evening bell.

REBECCA TO ROWENA.

“ Lady, I've looked upon thy face ;
 And beauty, kindness, virtue, grace,
 Have all combined to make thee fair
 O ! may thy fortunes be as bright,

As are those eyes, whose gentle light
Thy features now so softly wear.

Lady, I love thee, for thou art
The bride of him to whom my heart—”

She paused and turned aside—a tear
Flowed from her eye—“O! I am weak,
Forgive me, but I cannot speak
Of him who is to thee so dear ;

To whom I owe my honour, life ;
Who fought so nobly at the strife,—
The mortal strife of Templestowe,—
For a poor Jewish maiden, whom
All other men left to her doom,
As if she were of man the foe.

My blessing on him—fare thee well ;
Long in my heart thy form shall dwell
Enshrined ; and when I think of thee,
Joyful shall be the tears I shed,
That Heaven has poured upon thy head
Its richest gifts.—Lady, thou’lt see

My face no more ; I go away
To other lands—men shall not say,
That the poor Jewess lives a slave!
No, my despised, degraded race
In this fair land can have no place.
Yet, though the darkly-rolling wave

Divide us while we live on earth,
 We meet again ;—my lowly birth,
 The scorn which all have freely given
 As if it were my birth-right here,
 Are nought ;—my humble, fervent prayer
 The God of Israel shall hear ;—we meet in Heaven.

PAINTING—A PERSONIFICATION.

One bright sunshiny autumn day,
 When the leaves were just beginning to fade,
 I saw a gay and laughing maid
 Stand by the side of a public way.

There she stood erect and tall ;
 Her flowery cheek had caught the dyes
 Of the earliest dawn—and O ! her eyes,
 Not a star that shoots or flies,
 But those dark eyes outshine them all.

She stood with a long and slender wand,
 With a tassel of hair at its pointed tip ;
 And fast as the dews from a forest drip,
 When a summer shower has bathed the land,
 So quick a thousand colours came,
 Darting along like shapes of flame,
 At every turn of her gliding hand.

She gave a form to the bodiless air,
 And clear as a mirrored sheet it lay;
 And phantoms would come and pass away,
 As her magical rod was pointed there.

First, the shape of a budding rose,
 Just unfolding its tender leaf;
 Then, all unbound its virgin zone,
 Full in its pride and beauty blown,
 It heavily hangs like a nodding sheaf;
 And a cloud of perfume around it flows.

Then a mingling of vale and hill,
 Hung around with a woody screen—
 O! how alive its quivering green;
 And there a babbling brook is seen
 To turn the wheel of a moss-grown mill:
 There is a clear and glassy pool,
 And a boy lies idly along its brink,
 And he drops a pebble to see it sink
 Down in that depth, so calm and cool;
 And out from behind a bowering tree
 There peeps a maiden crowned with flowers;
 The two are innocent paramours—
 At her delicate laugh he turns to see,
 And then she darts like a frightened fawn
 That springs away from the turfy lawn,
 And far in the tangled thicket cowers—
 So she flies in her haste to hide
 The blush that mantles her cheek and brow;

Then he languidly turns his eye aside
 To the quiet brook's eternal flow.
 There you may see a warrior horse,
 All his trappings are dropped with gold—
 How his eye sparkles! and O! how bold,
 As he springs away in his pride and force.
 There a dark and keen-eyed Moor
 Hangs and pulls at his bridle rein,
 But all his skill and might are vain;
 He prances and tosses—and hark! away,
 Bright as the flashing steeds of day,
 He has broke from his keeper, and flings his mane,
 Like a streaming meteor, over the plain.
 Can you not see the creature neigh,
 In his vapoury nostrils panting wide,
 In his tossing head and his arch of pride,
 And his rapid glance from side to side,
 As he stands and beats the echoing ground
 With quivering tramp, and sudden bound?
 Then with a tremble in every limb,
 And an angry snort he darts away,
 And round in a circle he seems to swim,
 Or bends and turns like a lamb at play.

What is that comes from a golden cloud,
 Floating along in thinnest air—
 Was there ever a shape so fine and fair?
 And O! what wealth of sunny hair
 Clings around like a glittering shroud—

See! she raises a snowy arm,
 Pure as a flake, ere it leaves the sky—
 She waves it around with a grace and a charm,
 And putting her glossy ringlets by,
 Shows to the sight a lip and eye ;—
 Is it a shape of light and air,
 A vermeil cloud, and a midnight star,
 That meet and mingle in glory there,
 Or one of the winged spirits that fly
 Like the prophet who rose in his fiery car?
 No, 't is a being of human mould,
 Changing with blush, and tear, and smile,
 Such as the bard in his lonely isle,
 Close to his heart would love to fold.
 Back she throws her tossing curls,
 Cheek, and brow, and neck are bare,
 Tenderly crimson and purely fair,
 Like a damask rose when it first unfurls
 Its feathery bosom to light and air.
 Now that world of grace is calm,
 Sweeter and dearer, but not so bright,—
 Like a flower when it sends the dew of night
 Back from its breast in a cloud of balm.
 See on her lids the gathering tear,
 Clear as a star in the midnight main,
 Such she might drop on her mother's bier,
 Or shed for the youth who has long been dear,
 When she parts and never may meet again—
 O! what flashes of glory break
 From that crystalline fount of love and joy ;

All her smiles and glances wake,
 And those opening lips such music make,
 As rings from the heart of the hunter boy,
 When he springs through the forest, fleet and proud,
 And the startled echoes are many and loud,
 Loud as the burst of a nation's joy,
 In the rocks that girdle the mountain lake.

Now for the touch of a master hand—
 See! how she poises and waves her wand,
 As if in a dream of busy thought
 She sought for visions and found them not.
 Now it rises—and look—what power
 Springs to life, as she lifts her rod—
 Is it a hero, or visible god,
 Or bard in his rapt and gifted hour?
 What a lofty and glorious brow,
 Bent like a temple's towering arch,
 As if that a wondering world might march
 To the altar of mind, and kneel and bow;—
 And then what a deep and spirited eye,
 Quick as a quivering orb of fire,
 Changing and shifting from love to ire,
 Like the lights in a summer-evening sky;—
 Then the living and breathing grace
 Sent from the whole of that magic face,
 The eloquent play of his lips, the smile
 Sporting in sunbeams there awhile,
 Then with the throb of passion pressed
 Like a shivering leaf that cannot rest,—

And still as a lake when it waits a storm,
 That wraps the mountain's giant form,
 When they lie in the shade of his awful frown,
 And his gathered brows are wrinkled down.

Such the visions that breathe and live,
 The playful touch of her wand can give.

RIZPAH.

And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill before the Lord; and they fell all seven together, and were put to death in the days of the harvest, in the first days, in the beginning of barley-harvest.

And Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harvest until the water dropped upon them out of heaven, and suffered neither the birds of the air to rest upon them by day, nor the beasts of the field by night.

2 Samuel, xxi. 9. 10,

Hear what the desolate Rizpah said,
 As on Gibeah's rocks she watched the dead.
 The sons of Michel before her lay,
 And her own fair children, dearer than they :
 By a death of shame they all had died,
 And were stretched on the bare rock, side by side.
 And Rizpah, once the loveliest of all
 That bloomed and smiled in the court of Saul,
 All wasted with watching and famine now,
 And scorched by the sun her haggard brow,

Sat, mournfully guarding their corpses there,
 And murmured a strange and solemn air ;
 The low, heart-broken, and wailing strain
 Of a mother that mourns her children slain.

I have made the crags my home, and spread
 On their desert backs my sackcloth bed ;
 I have eaten the bitter herb of the rocks,
 And drank the midnight dew in my locks ;
 I have wept till I could not weep, and the pain
 Of my burning eyeballs went to my brain.
 Seven blackened corpses before me lie,
 In the blaze of the sun and the winds of the sky.
 I have watched them through the burning day,
 And driven the vulture and raven away ;
 And the cormorant wheeled in circles round,
 Yet feared to alight on the guarded ground.
 And, when the shadows of twilight came,
 I have seen the hyena's eyes of flame,
 And heard at my side his stealthy tread,
 But aye at my shout the savage fled ;
 And I threw the lighted brand, to fright
 The jackal and wolf that yelled in the night.

Ye were foully murdered, my hapless sons,
 By the hands of wicked and cruel ones ;
 Ye fell, in your fresh and blooming prime,
 All innocent, for your father's crime.
 He sinned—but he paid the price of his guilt
 When his blood by a nameless hand was spilt ;

When he strove with the heathen host in vain,
 And fell with the flower of his people slain,
 And the sceptre his children's hands should sway
 From his injured lineage passed away.

But I hoped that the cottage roof would be
 A safe retreat for my sons and me ;
 And that while they ripened to manhood fast,
 They should wean my thoughts from the woes of the past.
 And my bosom swelled with a mother's pride,
 As they stood in their beauty and strength by my side,
 Tall like their sire, with the princely grace
 Of his stately form, and the bloom of his face.

Oh, what an hour for a mother's heart,
 When the pitiless ruffians tore us apart !
 When I clasped their knees and wept and prayed,
 And struggled and shrieked to heaven for aid,
 And clung to my sons with desperate strength,
 Till the 'murderers loosed my hold at length,
 And bore me breathless and faint aside,
 In their iron arms, while my children died.
 They died—and the mother that gave them birth
 Is forbid to cover their bones with earth.

The barley harvest was nodding white,
 When my children died on the rocky height,
 And the reapers were singing on hill and plain,
 When I came to my task of sorrow and pain.
 But now the season of rain is nigh,

The sun is dim in the thickening sky,
 And the clouds in sullen darkness rest,
 When he hides his light at the doors of the west.
 I hear the howl of the wind that brings
 The long drear storm on its heavy wings;
 But the howling wind, and the driving rain
 Will beat on my houseless head in vain :
 I shall stay, from my murdered sons to scare
 The beasts of the desert, and fowls of the air.

SONNET.

Why have ye lingered on your way so long,
 Bright visions, who were wont to hear my call,
 And with the harmony of dance and song
 Keep round my dreamy couch a festival ?
 Where are ye gone with all your eyes of light,
 And where the flowery voice I loved to hear,
 When, through the silent watches of the night,
 Ye whispered like an angel in my ear ?—
 O ! fly not with the rapid wing of time,
 But with your ancient votary kindly stay,
 And while the loftier dreams that rose sublime
 In years of higher hope, have flown away,
 O ! with the colours of a softer clime,
 Give your last touches to the dying day.

THE PERPETUAL YOUTH OF NATURE.

A SOLILOQUY.

With what a hollow voice these broken ruins
Tell of the vanished past. Here they are thrown Too rudely for the most inquiring eye
To read one legend of the men who reared them,
Or even form a guess of those who made
These walls their home. It is a beautiful clime,
And all the year is lovely on these shores;
For there is neither winter here to blight,
Nor the hot sun to dry the fountains up,
And make the plains a desert. Nature here
Has built her bower of evergreens; and flowers
Are never wanting for her festivals,
And these are every day, and there is in them
Such a perpetual variety
Of bright and fair, the heart is never weary
Of the soft revelry;—and yet no trace
Of human footsteps on the bordering sands
Of the calm ocean, gives a sign that man
Has found his way before me to this haunt
Of silence and repose. Well, be it so,
And I will hold myself the rightful lord
Of all this fair domain, by the strong claim
Of first discovery. No inheritance
Of gilded palaces, or loaded fields
Bent with a thousand harvests, could so fill
My spirit with the stirring health of joy,

As thus to hold myself the sole possessor
Of such a solitude—so full of life,
And yet so mute,—so bright and beautiful,
And yet so darkly shadowed with the pall
Of buried ages. How the merry vines
Go gadding in the brisk and spirited air,
That even calls from out the barren rocks
A welcoming smile. The wind is very low—
It hardly wags the shrinking violet,
Or sends a quiver to the aspen leaf,
Or curls the green wave on the pebbled shore,
Or gives a wrinkle to the quiet sea,
That like a giant resting from his toil,
Sleeps in the morning sun. That flowery palm
Has a most glorious aspect as he bows
In silent worship to his rising god;
And from his station on the tallest pile
Of these mysterious ruins, once the shrine,
It may be, of the living Sun himself,
How like a most majestic sovereign
He keeps his lofty seat, and yet adores
The Lord that made him. It is wonderful,
That man should hold himself so haughtily,
And talk of an immortal name, and feed
His proud ambition with such daring hopes,
As creatures of a more eternal nature
Alone should form. Why, 't is a mockery
Too poor for tears, and yet too sad for smiles,
To think how much of glitter and of pride
Has flaunted in the Sun, and sent him back

His fullest beams. These rude disjointed heaps,
 That seem the chaos of a broken world,
 And hardly give us signs enough to show,
 They were not thrown from out the central earth
 By an upheaving earthquake—these were bright
 With such barbaric pomp, as made the Sun
 Muffle his head, and hide himself at noon
 To shun the poor encounter. So they sung,
 The sycophants, who told the gorgeous tyrant
 Of these once peopled shores, he was a god,
 And with the port and bearing of a god
 Sat on his throne, or in his chariot
 Went sounding on his long triumphal way.
 Fools! and where are they? Not a mark to tell
 The shadows of their names—The tooth of Time
 Has ground the marble sculptures to rude forms
 Such as the falling waters eat from rocks
 In the deep gloom of caves!—and yet, as if They meant to show their scorn of him, who calls
 Himself their lord, the beasts and creeping things
 Have come from out their deserts and their holes,
 And made their dens in the crushed palaces,
 And round the buried altars hollowed out
 Their lurking-places. O! how fresh and fair
 Grows the young grass, and how the wild vines clasp
 The rifted columns, with as bright a foliage,
 As when from out the bosom of the earth
 First rose the rampant Spring, and the glad Sun
 Laughed from his azure throne to see the buds
 Put out their tender leaves, and the soft green
 Spread like a carpet to the tented sky.

MOUNT WASHINGTON.

The loftiest peak of the White Mountains, N. H.

Mount of the clouds ; on whose Olympian height
The tall rocks brighten in the ether air,
And spirits from the skies come down at night,
To chant immortal songs to Freedom there !
Thine is the rock of other regions ; where
The world of life which blooms so far below
Sweeps a wide waste : no gladdening scenes appear,
Save where with silvery flash the waters flow
Beneath the far off mountain, distant, calm, and slow.

Thine is the summit where the clouds repose,
Or eddying wildly round thy cliffs are borne ;
When Tempest mounts his rushing car, and throws
His billowy mist amid the thunder's home !
Far down the deep ravines the whirlwinds come,
And bow the forests as they sweep along ;
While roaring deeply from their rocky womb
The storms came forth—and hurrying darkly on,
Amid the echoing peaks the revelry prolong !

And when the tumult of the air is fled,
And quenched in silence all the tempest flame,
There come the dim forms of the mighty dead,
Around the steep which bears the hero's name.
The stars look down upon them—and the same
Pale orb that glistens o'er his distant grave,
Gleams on the summit that enshrines his fame,

And lights the cold tear of the glorious brave—
The richest, purest tear, that memory ever gave!

Mount of the clouds! when winter round thee throws
The hoary mantle of the dying year,
Sublime amid thy canopy of snows,
Thy towers in bright magnificence appear!
'T is then we view thee with a chilling fear,
Till summer robes thee in her tints of blue;
When lo! in softened grandeur, far, yet clear,
Thy battlements stand clothed in Heaven's own hue,
To swell as Freedom's home on man's unbounded view!

SUNRISE FROM MOUNT WASHINGTON.

The laughing hours have chased away the Night
Plucking the stars out from her diadem;
And now the blue-eyed morn with modest grace,
Looks through her half-drawn curtains in the East
Blushing in smiles—and glad as infancy.
And see! the foolish Moon, but now so vain
Of borrowed beauty, how she yields her charms,
And, pale with envy, steals herself away!
The clouds have put their gorgeous livery on Attendant on the day. The mountain tops
Have lit their beacons,—and the vales below
Send up a welcoming. No song of birds,

Warbling to charm the air with melody,
 Floats on the frosty breeze ; yet Nature hath
 The very soul of music in her looks,—
 The sunshine and the shade of poetry !

I stand upon thy loftiest pinnacle,
 Temple of Nature ! and look down with awe
 On the wide world beneath me, dimly seen.
 Around me crowd the giant sons of earth,
 Fixed on their old foundations, unsubdued,—
 Firm as when first rebellion bade them rise,
 Unrfted to the Thunderer ;—now they seem
 A family of mountains, clustering round
 Their hoary patriarch,—emulously watching
 To meet the partial glances of the day.
 Far in the glowing East, the flecking light,
 Mellowed by distance,—with the blue sky blending,—
 Questions the eye with ever-varying forms.
 The sun is up ;—away the shadows fling
 From the broad hills, and hurrying to the west,
 Sport in the sunshine, till they die away.
 The many beauteous mountain-streams leap down,
 Out-welling from the clouds,—and sparkling light
 Dances along with their perennial flow.
 And there is beauty in yon river's path—
 The glad Connecticut. I know her well
 By the white veil she mantles o'er her charms.
 At times, she loiters by a ridge of hills,
 Sportfully hiding ; then again with glee
 Out-rushes from her wild-wood lurking-place.

Far as the eye can bound, the ocean-waves
 And lakes and rivers, mountains, vales and woods,
 And all that holds the Faculty entranced,
 Bathed in a flood of glory, float in air,
 And sleep in the deep quietude of joy !
 There is a fearful stillness in this place—
 A presence that forbids to break the spell,
 Till the heart pours its agony in tears.
 But I must drink the vision while it lasts ;
 For even now the curling vapours rise,
 Wreathing their cloudy coronals to grace
 These towering summits—bidding me away.
 But often shall my heart turn back again,
 Thou glorious eminence !—and when oppressed
 And aching with the coldness of the world,
 Find a sweet resting-place and home with thee

SONNET.

O ! thou sole-sitting Spirit of Loneliness,
 Whose haunt is by the wild and dropping caves ;
 Thou, of the musing eye and scattered tress,
 I meet thee with a passionate joy, no less
 Than when the mariner, from off his waves,
 Catches the glimpses of a far blue shore—
 He thinks the danger of his voyage o'er,
 And pressing all his canvass, steers to land,

With a glad bosom and a ready hand.
 So I would hie me to thy desolate shade,
 And seat myself in some deep-sheltered nook,
 And never breathe a wish again to look
 On the tossed world, but rather listless laid
 Pore on the bubbles of the passing brook.

THE LAST SONG OF THE GREEK PATRIOT.

One last, best effort now—

They shall not call us slaves—
 These iron necks shall never bow
 To barter for a hated life,
 But we will tell in mortal strife,
 What wrath a freeman braves—
 A few short years, and we have known
 The pride and joy—to live alone.

Our ancient land was free,—

We washed its stains in blood—
 Again the hymn of Liberty
 Rose from the high Athenian shrine,
 And virgin hands did often twine,
 In the dark olive wood,
 Their garlands for the youthful brow,
 Who taught the heathen Turk to bow.

These have been glorious days—

Let come what will, our fame
Is like the sun's eternal blaze,
And when they tell of Marathon,
And all the fields our fathers won,

They too shall name
Botzaris, and the few who died,
Victims of glory, by his side.

The world has told our doom—

'T is Liberty or Death—
The tree we planted must not bloom,
For Turk and Christian—all unite,
And royal hands our sentence write,
And yet our breath,
When trampled by the ruffian herd,
Shall never breathe one recreant word.

If we must die—then die—

And let the foul disgrace
Cling to their names eternally,
Who, when they had the power to save,
Doomed to a dark and bloody grave

A high, devoted race—
Awhile the sweets of life to know,
O God! and then to perish so!

But Freedom has one shore—

Would we could shelter there
The tender ones, we value more

Than life or fame—O ! generous men,
 Be with us, as ye long have been,
 And we will share
 All the poor fruit of toils and pains,—
 Our hearts—our lives—perhaps, our chains.

Come, at this fatal hour,
 Ye last of high-born souls ;
 Come—when the crushing weight of power
 Has all but bent our necks to earth—
 We will not shame our glorious birth ;
 Nor 'Turk, nor Hun controls
 The heart that holds the Spartan fire,
 The sacred relic of his sire.

We know, ye cannot fear—
 We know, that ye are brave—
 To us—your very name is dear—
 O ! by that name, and all its light,
 We bid ye join the murderous fight,
 To win and save—
 O ! come—if it be only time
 To fall with us—in Death sublime.

GRECIAN LIBERTY.

Glorious Vision ! who art thou,
 With thy starry crown of light,

Like the diadem of night
 On the Æthiop monarch's brow?—
 And why art thou descending
 From thy bright Olympian throne,
 And thy lavish glory lending,
 Like the ever-rolling sun,
 To the self-devoted band
 On the threshold of their land?
 Few, but hardy are their ranks,
 And they never will retire,
 Though ten thousand on their flanks
 Hurl a storm of steel and fire—
 Though an iron tempest rain
 Death and darkness, till the day
 Pass in dim eclipse away—
 Though the thunderbolts of war,
 Plough their furrows in the plain,
 And the echoing mountains bay
 To the tumult from afar.

O! bright and glorious creature
 Winged, and mailed, and armed for fight;
 Though beautiful in feature,
 Like a Spirit of delight;
 Yet the arching of thy brow,
 And thy proud and gallant form,
 Tell of one who rides the storm,
 When the sternest warriors bow,
 And the bravest yield their breath
 At the summoning of Death.

There thou standest on the mountains,
 And the sparkle of thy spear,
 Like a sunbeam on the fountains,
 To the gallant few below,
 Is a sign of wrath and fear
 To the blind and brutal foe ;—
 Like a beacon let it blaze
 Broad and flaring till it daze
 All who come with foot profane
 To this consecrated plain,
 Where thy pure and perfect shrine
 Youths and maidens loved to twine
 With the laurel and the myrtle—
 And the shadow of thy grove,
 Haunt of innocence and love,
 Heard the winged arrows hurtle
 From the flowery-wreathen bow,
 With a whisper like the flow
 Of a brook, that winds afar
 Underneath the Evening Star.

O! they were happy days,
 When, reposing in the shade,
 Elms, and vines, and poplars made,
 It was all thy joy to gaze
 On the races and the dances,
 Twining hands and burning glances,
 Where Passion went and came,
 Like an arrow tipped with flame.
 Though thou didst often lie

With a pleased and placid eye,
 As thy children took their pleasure,
 And the merry flute and viol
 Told, in light and airy measure,
 All the joys and sports of leisure ;
 Not the less, to meet the trial,
 Thou would'st gird thy warlike arms,
 And with bare and eager blade,
 On, though dangers and alarms,
 To the wreath of Victory wade.
 Thou could'st leave thy pleasant woods,
 And the harvest of the plain,
 And along the torrent floods
 To the frozen mountains climb,
 Where they reared their fronts sublime ;
 Or scorning Slavery's chain,
 Make thy dwelling on the main.
 From the Dorian rocks and caves,
 When the gorged and gluttoned foe
 Lay in careless ease below,
 Like an Alpine stream that raves
 When the autumn rains are pouring,
 And the pines in mist are towering ;
 So thou did'st rush and sweep
 To the dark remorseless deep,
 With thy fury and thy force,
 Shield and chariot, man and horse,
 And thy sword wrought far and wide,
 Till the land was purified.

And now thou dost awake,
And thy dream of ages break—
From the halls of ice and snow,
Whence thy classic rivers flow;
From thy palace in the clouds,
Where the light of evening runs
On the rolling wreath that shrouds
The last refuge of thy sons—
Peaks, that never Turk has trod,
Where the armed and ardent Klepht
Found his shelter, when he left,
For a prey to wasting fires,
All the temples of his God,
And the dwellings of his sires ;—
From thy caverns in the rock,
From thy dark and hidden hold,
Thou hast nerved thee to the shock,
And thy warning shout has rolled—
Height from height has caught the sound
And thy foes in haste retire ;
Now the tumult rises higher—
'Tis a nation's cry of joy—
"None to ravage and destroy—
Not a foreign foot is found
On our consecrated ground."

TIME AND BEAUTY.

Ruthless Time, who waits for no man,
But with scythe, and wings, and glass,
Lies in wait for youth and woman,
Saw one morning Beauty pass.

O'er the flowers she bounded lightly,
Smiling as a summer's day ;
Time, who marked her eyes beam brightly,
Chose the fair one for his prey.

"Maid," he rudely cried, "good morrow !
Knowest thou not what rights are mine ?
Beauty 'tis my wont to borrow ;
And I come to gather thine."

"I'll not yield it," cried she boldly ;
"Monster, do not draw so nigh."
"Come with me," he answered coldly.
"Go with thee !" said she "not I."

Time his scythe extended o'er her,
Threatening with his withered hand ;
And his hour-glass shook before her,
Pointing to the running sand.

But the maiden all intrepid,
Answered, laughing carelessly,
"I am young, and thou decrepid,
What hast thou to do with me."

Time replied, with purpose steady,
 " Wrinkles I must lend thy brow." "
Beauty cried, " I 'm not yet ready," Flying, cried, " not ready now."

Time pursued, with will unshaken ;
 Beauty fled with rapid feet,
Yet was soon well nigh o'ertaken,
 For the old man's wings are fleet.

But the maiden, nothing fearful,
 Calls on Wisdom, power divine ;
Wisdom comes, with aspect cheerful,
 Leads her to her ancient shrine.

There her eye all passion loses,
 But with reason shines serene ;
Truth its sober charms diffuses
 Gently o'er her softened mien.

Thought restrains her youthful wildness ;
 Calmness holy hopes bestow ;
On her face love joined to mildness
 Blends its light with virtue's glow.

Time saw heavenly graces cluster,
 Left, o'erawed, his will undone ;
Beauty smiled in angel lustre ;
 Time was vanquished ; Beauty won.

A VISION.

I have been haunted by an awful dream—
 A vision of my childhood—one that grew
 From an o'erheated fancy, nursed to fear
 In a dark, visionary creed. A Star,
 Of a malign aspect, had been to me,
 For a few weeks of dread uncertainty,
 The prophet of evil ; and I saw in it
 The minister of judgments, such as oft
 Had been denounced before me, and had grown
 To an undoubting faith.

Methought that Star,
 As in a vision of the night I lay,
 Stood with its train directed to the Earth,
 And every moment it did spread itself,
 And grew a deeper crimson. Where I was
 I could not tell ; but I stood gazing on it
 With unaverted eye, and I could watch it
 Taking ten thousand fiery shapes, and changing
 To every terrible hue and form, and still Widening and widening out its burning orb,
 Till a whole quarter of the heavens was red
 And glowing like a furnace. Then, methought,
 A form stood visible within it, vast
 And indistinct, as a far mountain, seen
 Through a dense vapour, when the morning strikes it,
 And makes it such a thing as the mind frames,
 When it goes wandering through the infinite,

And builds on dreams. I gazed upon it, chamed
 And fascinated by its terrible glory,
 And with it such a sense of fear,—the drops
 Stood thick upon my forehead, and my heart
 Was near to bursting. 'T was an agony
 Of wonder and of death; for I beheld
 Already come the day of doom, and Earth
 Seemed parched and burnt by the intensity
 Of that approaching flame. The sky above
 Was like a vaulted furnace, and it quivered
 And sparkled in the heat, and at the centre,
 Transparent in the fierceness of its fire,
 Still that illimitable form did frown
 Blacker than tenfold night. His quick approach Left me no time to scan him, but he seemed
 To gather in himself all I had heard
 Or dreamed of horrible. A muttering sound,
 Like that of far-off winds, or smothered flame
 Roaring in caves,—a sound that fell like fate
 On my stunned ear, came as a warning voice,
 That Earth was now within the wasting sphere
 Of that consuming plague. At once the wind
 Seemed to blow over me, with hot, thick breath,
 Wafting such clouds of smoke and sheets of fire,
 That all around me seemed one conflagration;
 And even the firm foundations of the hills
 Cracked and fell inward, and one long, long peal
 Gave warning, that this ponderous globe was rent
 And shivered. Suddenly a burst of flame
 So clear and strong, no thought can image it,

Filled the whole visible space ; and still it flashed,
 And flashed, till in an instant utter darkness
 Closed heavily, around me, and I woke :—
 I woke, and yet the horrors of that dream
 Would visit me at times, even when I grew
 To know its causes, and could reason of it ;
 And though the mind moved in its own pure light,
 And stood aloof from fear, yet there were moments,
 When the dark memory of this dream would quell me
 Well nigh to trembling.

ITALY--A CONFERENCE.

A. Why hast thou such a downward look of care,
 As if thine eye refused the sweet communion
 Of these enchanted skies ? I cannot weary
 In gazing on them, there is such a clearness
 In the mid-noon ; and then the calmer hours
 Have such a glory round them, that I grow
 Enamoured of their clouds. O ! they have caught
 Their hues in Heaven, and they come stealing to us
 Like messengers of love to kindle up
 This volatile air. How light and thin it floats—
 Methinks I now can pass into the depths
 Of yon wide firmament, it lies so open
 And shows so fair. The stars are hung below it,
 And they are moving in a vacancy,
 Like the poised eagle. How the studded moon,

All dropped with glittering points, rolls on its way
 Between the pillowy clouds, and that which seems
 A crystalline arch—a dome that rests on air,
 Buoyed by its lightness. Can thy heavy eyes
 Still pore on the discoloured earth, and choose Their home in darkness? Something weighs upon thee

With no light burden, if thou hast no heart
 To mingle with the beautiful world around thee.

B. Thou talk'st of clouds and skies. Has the sweet face
 Of spring a power to charm away the fiends
 That riot on the soul? Will the foul spirit
 Go, when the cock crows, like a muttering ghost,
 To find his kindred shades, and leave the heart
 To gladden through the day, and dares he not
 To fill it with his terrors, when the Sun
 Is out in heaven? Is there a sovereign balm
 In cloudless skies, and bright and glowing noons,
 To make the spirit light, and drive from it
 The moody madness and the listless sorrow?
 I feel there is not. Something tells me, here,
 There may be such a grief, that nothing earthly Hath power to stay it. I too have a feeling,
 How beautiful this clime; and though the native
 Looks on it with a blank indifference,
 To us who had our birth in clouded skies,
 And reckoned it a bright and fortunate day,
 If the sun gave us but an hour at noon,
 It is indeed a luxury to see

Whole days without a cloud, but these light shapes,
 That float around us more like heavenly spirits,
 They are so bright and wear such glorious hues,
 Or hang so quietly, and look so pure,
 When all is still at noon. O! I have felt
 This luxury of sense, but yet it comes not
 So far as here. The heart knows nothing of it;
 And now that I have seen so many days,
 All of an equal brightness, like the calm
 That reigns, they say, perpetually in Heaven,
 Why—I grow weary of them, and my thoughts
 Are on the past. Thou need'st no other answer.

A. 'T is not the barren luxury of sense,
 That makes me love these skies—but there is in them

A living spirit. I can feel it stealing
 Even to my heart of hearts, and waking there
 Feelings that never yet have stirred within me,
 So blessed, that I almost weep to think
 How poor my life without them. I now walk
 In a glad company of happy visions,
 And all the air seems like a dwelling-place
 For glorious creatures. Like the shifting waves,
 That toss on the white shore, when evening breezes
 Steal to the land in summer, they are floating
 In airy trains around me. Now they come
 Laughing on yonder mountain side, a troop
 Of airy nymphs, and now they flit away
 Round the far islands of the golden sea,—

Islands of light that seem to hang in air,
 Midway in heaven. No wonder they so love
 The song and dance, and walk with such a look
 Of thoughtless gaiety—the merry beggars,
 Who breed like insects on these sunny shores,
 And live as idly. There are glorious faces
 Among them—there are Roman spirits here,
 And Grecian eyes that tell a thousand fancies,
 Like those that shaped their deities, and wrought Perfection. True, they have no stirring hopes
 To lift them; yet at times they will give vent
 To the o'erburdened soul, and then they speak
 In oracles, or like the harp of Memnon,
 They utter poetry, as the bright skies
 And stirring winds awake it. Who can wonder,
 That every voice is bursting out in music,
 And every peasant tunes his mandoline
 To the delicious airs, that creep so softly
 Into the slumbering ear. O! 't is a land,
 Where life is doubled, and a brighter world
 Rolls over this, and there the spirit lives
 In a gay paradise, and here we breathe
 An atmosphere of roses.

B Yes—But this
 Is nothing to the heart. They never felt
 These summer flies, who buzz so gaily round us,
 They never felt, one moment, what we feel
 With such a silent tenderness, and keep
 So closely round our hearts. We do not wake

The echoes with our loud and thoughtless carols,
 Nor sit whole days beneath a bowering vine,
 Singing its amber juice, and telling too
 Of starry eyes, and soft and languishing looks,
 And talking of our agonies with smiles,
 Making a sport of sorrow. No, our year,
 With its long time of gloom, and hurried days
 Of warmth, that call for more of toil than pleasure
 Our pensive year forbids the wandering spirit
 To make itself a song-bird. We must keep Our sorrows and our hopes close cherished by us,
 Till the heart softens, and by often musing
 Takes a deep, serious tone, and has a feeling
 For all that suffer. So we often bear
 A grief, that is the burden of a life,
 And will not leave us. Something that would seem Too trifling to be laughed at here, will weigh
 And weigh upon us, till we cannot lift it,
 And then we pine and die. Her heart is broken,
 And the worm feeds upon her early roses,
 And now her lily fades, and all its brightness
 Turns to a green and sallow melancholy,
 And then we strew her grave;—but here the passion
 Breaks out in wildness, then is sung away
 With a complaining air, and so is ended.
 I have no sympathy with such light spirits,
 But I can see my sober countrymen
 Gather around their winter's hearth, and read
 Of no unreal suffering, and then weep
 Big tears that ease the heart, and need no words

To make their meaning known. One silent hour
 Of deep and thoughtful feeling stands me more,
 Than a whole age of such a heartless mirth,
 As a bright summer wakens.

ITALIAN SCENERY.

—Night rests in beauty on Mont Alto.
 Beneath its shade the beauteous Arno sleeps
 In Vallombrosa's bosom, and dark trees
 Bend with a calm and quiet shadow down
 Upon the beauty of that silent river.
 Still in the west, a melancholy smile
 Mantles the lips of day, and twilight pale
 Moves like a spectre in the dusky sky ;
 While eve's sweet star on the fast-fading year
 Smiles calmly :—Music steals at intervals
 Across the water, with a tremulous swell,
 From out the upland dingle of tall firs,
 And a faint foot-fall sounds, where dim and dark
 Hangs the gray willow from the river's brink,
 O'er-shadowing its current. Slowly there
 The lover's gondola drops down the stream,
 Silent,—save when its dipping oar is heard,
 Or in its eddy sighs the rippling wave.
 Mouldering and moss-grown, through the lapse of years,

In motionless beauty stands the giant oak,
 Whilst those, that saw its green and flourishing youth,
 Are gone and are forgotten. Soft the fount,
 Whose secret springs the star-light pale discloses,
 Gushes in hollow music, and beyond
 The broader river sweeps its silent way,
 Mingling a silver current with that sea,
 Whose waters have no tides, coming nor going.
 On noiseless wing along that fair blue sea
 The halcyon flits,—and where the wearied storm
 Left a loud moaning, all is peace again.

A calm is on the deep! The winds that came O'er the dark sea-surge with a tremulous breathing,
 And mourned on the dark cliff where weeds grew rank,
 And to the Autumnal death-dirge the deep sea
 Heaved its long billows,—with a cheerless song,
 Have passed away to the cold earth again,
 Like a way-faring mourner. Silently
 Up from the calm sea's dim and distant verge,
 Full and unveiled the moon's broad disk emerges.
 On Tivoli, and where the fairy hues
 Of autumn glow upon Abruzzi's woods,
 The silver light is spreading. Far above,
 Encompassed with their thin, cold atmosphere,
 The Apennines uplift their snowy brows,
 Glowing with colder beauty, where unheard
 The eagle screams in the fathomless ether,
 And stays his wearied wing. Here let us pause!—

The spirit of these solitudes—the soul
 That dwells within these steep and difficult places—
 Speaks a mysterious language to mine own,
 And brings unutterable musings. Earth
 Sleeps in the shades of nightfall, and the sea
 Spreads like a thin blue haze beneath my feet,
 Whilst the gray columns and the mouldering tombs
 Of the Imperial City, hidden deep
 Beneath the mantle of their shadows, rest.
 My spirit looks on earth!—A heavenly voice
 Comes silently—“Dreamer, is earth thy dwelling?—
 Lo! nursed within that fair and fruitful bosom
 Which has sustained thy being, and within
 The colder breast of Ocean, lie the germs
 Of thine own dissolution!—E’en the air,
 That fans the clear blue sky and gives thee strength,—
 Up from the sullen lake of mouldering reeds,
 And the wide waste of forest, where the osier
 Thrives in the damp and motionless atmosphere,—
 Shall bring the dire and wasting pestilence
 And blight thy cheek. Dream thou of higher things;—
 This world is not thy home!”—And yet my eye
 Rests upon earth again! How beautiful,
 Where wild Velino heaves its sullen waves
 Down the high cliff of gray and shapeless granite,— Hung on the curling mist, the moonlight bow
 Arches the perilous river.—A soft light
 Silvers the Albanian mountains, and the haze
 That rests upon their summits, mellows down
 The austerer features of their beauty. Faint

And dim-discovered glow the Sabine hills,
 And listening to the sea's monotonous shell,
 High on the cliffs of Terracina stands
 The castle of the royal Goth in ruins.

But night is in her wane:—day's early flush
 Glows like a hectic on her fading cheek,
 Wasting its beauty. And the opening dawn
 With cheerful lustre lights the royal city,
 Where with its proud tiara of dark towers,
 It sleeps upon its own romantic bay.

THE FAIR ITALIAN.

She looked how lovely.—Not the face heaven
 In its serenest calm, nor earth in all
 Its garniture of flowers, nor all that live
 In the bright world of dreams, nor all the eye
 Of a creative spirit meets in air,
 Could in the smile and sunshine of her charms,
 Not feel itself o'ermastered by such rare
 And perfect beauty. Grace was over all;—
 Her form, her face, her attitudes, her motions,
 Each had peculiar charms.—Like gliding swans,
 Sailing upon the bosom of a lake,
 Before the breeze of evening, when the waves

Curl rippling round their bosoms, so she moved Through all the mazy dance. She bore herself
 So gently, that the lily on its stalk
 Bends not so easily its dewy head,
 As with a gliding step she wound her way
 To the soft echoes of the light guitar,
 The dreamy music of her sunny clime,
 Where all is languishing. There was a brightness,
 How high, and yet how soothing in her smile.
 O! I could look on her, a summer's day,
 Delighted—every moment more delighted,
 With the soft sense that hovers over me,
 When on a slope of moss, I lay me down
 In the warm sun of April. I could kneel
 In worship to her, as a radiant vision
 Sent from a purer world, without a stain
 Of earth breathed over her, but all entire
 In infant loveliness, yet ripe and full
 In her meridian elegance, a flower
 With all its leaves expanded, and its hues
 Mellowed by kindly sunbeams.

It was evening ;—

The sun looked through the wood of chesnut trees,
 And bronzed their rugged trunks, and lit their leaves,
 Till, as they rustled on the bending boughs,
 Each seemed a flake of gold ; and far beyond them
 My eye caught glimpses of a quiet bay,
 A nook of sleeping waters, where the light,
 Shone with a flashing blaze. It was so still !

The wind had stolen into the mountain valleys,
 And left the plains and hillocks to the calm,
 That sinks upon the world, when night steals on,
 And the day takes its farewell, like the words
 Of a departing friend, or the last tone
 Of hallowed music, in a minster's aisles,
 Heard, when it floats along the shade of elms,
 In the still place of graves. A wood of palms
 Rose on a far hill, where the amber light
 Was rich and dazzling, with their pointed leaves
 So nicely balanced, that the faintest breathing
 Of the wide air swayed them in graceful curves,
 While all below seemed in the still repose
 Of sleep, the twin of death, that infant slumber,
 Where life is only visible in the play
 Of blushes, which forever come and go
 On the soft cheek's transparency, as pure
 As the clear rime, that masks the untimely rose,
 Mellowing its purple to the hues of heaven,
 The tremulous tints of air.

I lay abroad

In careless dreaming, by the twisted roots
 Of an outspreading beech-tree, and methought,
 The swains of Enna and Parthenope
 Were dancing round me to the sound of viols
 And oaten pipes. As the light sank away,
 The rose and jasmine thickets, and the shades
 O'erhung with vines, in the full scent of flowers,
 Seemed populous with the silvan family

Of nymphs and fauns. I listened to the sounds
 Of Grecian melody and song, and lay
 Reclining on a couch of new plucked leaves,
 Attentive to the many quiet voices,
 That fill a summer's night—the drowsy hum
 Of beetles, and the shrill cicada's song,
 And the complaining of the nightingale,
 That in a bush of brambles, passed away
 The silent hours, in answering to the echoes,
 Herself had made. As thus I sank away
 In pleasant thoughts of the dear times of old,
 I saw a group of dancers, on a lawn
 Not distant, to the music of a lute
 Cross the yet rosy twilight. She was there,
 Lovelier for the witching time, they chose
 To be their hour of joy. Her full dark curls
 Were clustered on a brow of ivory,
 And fell in lavish wealth, shading a neck
 Clear as an alabaster shrine concealing
 A ruby, that with soft suffusion fills it,
 As with a living glow. Her face was kindled
 By the quick glances of her large black eyes,
 That flashed from underneath her arching brows,
 Like gems in caves; and yet there was a softness
 At times, when shades of thought stole over her—
 But in the happy consciousness of beauty
 Her heart was all so joyous, that her smiles
 Gave a perpetual sunlight to that face,
 So beautiful, to see it was to love.
 I could not choose but watch with earnest gaze

One of so perfect form, and finished grace,
 That those who moved around her, were but foils Heightening the one sole diamond. When I look
 On one so fair, I must believe that Heaven
 Sent her in kindness, that our hearts might waken
 To its own loveliness, and lift themselves
 By such an adoration from a dark
 And grovelling world. Such beauty should be worshipped,
 And not a thought of weakness or decay
 Should mingle with the pure and hallowed dreams,
 In which it dwells before us. It should live
 Eternal; or, if it must pass away,
 And lose one tint of its now perfect brightness,
 Let it be hidden from me, for the sense,
 That all this glow must fade, falls on my heart,
 Like the cold weight of death.

THE VENETIAN GONDOLIER.

Here rest the weary oar!—soft airs
 Breathe out in the o'erarching sky;
 And Night!—sweet Night—serenely wears
 A smile of peace;—her noon is nigh.

Where the tall fir in quiet stands,
 And waves, embracing the chaste shores,

Move o'er sea-shells and bright sands,—
Is heard the sound of dipping oars.

Swift o'er the wave the light bark springs,
Love's midnight hour draws lingering near:
And list!—his tuneful viol strings
The young Venetian Gondolier.

Lo! on the silver-mirrored deep,
On earth, and her embosomed lakes,
And where the silent rivers sweep—
From the thin cloud fair moonlight breaks.

Soft music breaths around, and dies
On the calm bosom of the sea;
Whilst in her cell the novice sighs
Her vespers to her rosary.

At their dim altars bow fair forms,
In tender charity for those,
That, helpless left to life's rude storms,
Have never found this calm repose.

The bell swings to its midnight chime,
Relieved against the deep blue sky!—
Haste!—dip the oar again!—'t is time
To seek Genevra's balcony.

EUTHANASIA.

My hour has come, I lay me down
With the dark grave in view ;
And hoping for a heavenly crown,
I bid the world adieu.

The angry forms of earth are fled,
The gentle in decay ;
For me no golden beams are shed,
My eyes are closed for aye.

One sense remains. I feel a hand
That gently grasps my own ;
I deem it one by sorrow fanned,
So tremulous its tone.
If it be thine, my gentle bride !
Grieve not thy fond heart thus ;
For, though the grave awhile divide,
Death opens a Heaven to us.

I asked of God an easy death,
And he has heard my prayer ;
My soul ebbs like the zephyr's breath
When noon-day calms the air.
A little throbbing of my heart
Weak as an infant's cry ;—
If thus life's links are rent apart
Why are we loth to die ?

I deemed of tortures in death's hour,
Of fevered brain and limb,

And of unearthly forms that lower,
 When the eye waxes dim.
 My dreams in death have other mould,
 Forms beautiful and bright
 Are with me—not the beaten gold
 Shines like those shapes of light.

I'm sinking as a bird on wing
 Drops from his soaring high;
 Comes to my tongue a faltering,
 And darkness to my eye.
 Oh! lift the mighty hill of snow
 From off my frozen breast;
 I come—the scene is closed below;
 And I enjoy a rest.

A SONG OVER THE GRAVE OF A LOVER.

Aye, flowers may glow
 In new born beauty, and the rosy spring
 To deck the earth its sparkling wreaths may bring,
 But where art thou?

The early bloom
 Of flowers in freshest infancy I wreathe,
 Their transient life of fragrancy to breathe
 Upon thy tomb.

And I have sought
 The lowly violet, that in shade appears,
 Shrinking from view like young love's tender fears,
 With sweetness fraught ;

And rosebuds too,
 Crimson as young Aurora's blush, or white
 As woman's cheek when touched by sorrow's blight,
 O'er thee I strew ;

And flowers, that close
 Their buds beneath the sun, but pure and pale
 Ope their sweet blossom 'neath the dewy veil,
 That evening throws.

The fragrant leaves
 Of the white lily too with these I twine—
 The drooping lily—that seems born to shine
 Where true love grieves.

There will be none
 To deck thy grave with flowers, and chant for thee
 These snatches of remembered melody,
 When I am gone.

But thou shalt have
 A gift more precious than the buds I fling—
 A broken heart!—my latest offering
 Upon thy grave.

REFORMED TOM BELL.

I never knew a man profaner
Than him they call reformed Tom Bell ;
Or one who more became a gainer
In worldly goods by arts of hell.
He cheated all, but most affected
Those easiest ruined by his guile ;
If he but found one unprotected,
Few were his years and brief his smile.

His father—mother died of sorrow
Brought on by his unkind career,
His wives, one, two, three, could not borrow
Of nuptial life, a single year.
And many a maiden, fondly trusting,
Heard in his vow her funeral knell ;
And many an orphan with heart bursting,
Asked heaven for vengeance on Tom Bell.

And as for orisons and preaching
In the bright temple where man soars,
Tom would be sooner seen beseeching
For entrance at a wanton's doors.
He held religion "a mere bubble,
An idle tale made by the priest ;
Got up to gull with little trouble
The loving fools who would be fleeced."

And thus Tom Bell went on despising
Religion, virtue, God, and good ;

He cared not, so his wealth kept rising,
 How other debts and credits stood.
 He came to thirty, vile as ever,
 One—two were added, half a third,
 When lo! Tom Bell, the unbeliever,
 Became a lover of the Word.

It was a night in cold November,
 Five days or more before its close,
 When shrill-voiced winds the oaks dismember,
 And hazy clouds foretel the snows ;
 When beasts go to their coverts creeping,
 When birds of passage seek mild skies,
 When the rough waves the cliffs are sweeping,
 There stood a form before his eyes.

He sat, that awful moment, resting
 Upon a bank of leafless firs,
 Watching to see a soft form breasting
 The chilly night-wind, even her's.
 When all at once as he sits gazing,
 He feels the air grow deadly cold ;
 And he beholds a tall form raising
 Itself from out the frozen mould.

Its dress was white, damp, grave-clothes flowing
 All heavily upon the gale ;
 Its eyes no more with life were glowing,
 Its brow was ghastly, and cheek pale.
 It bent itself, that cold corse, o'er him,
 Upon his shoulder laid its hand ;

With this thing from the tombs before him
All shuddering did the sinner stand.

And when it spoke, its tones were hollow ;—
“What dost thou here, this chilly night ?
Why, base seducer, dost thou follow
A gentle girl, to work her blight ?
I perished by thy base pursuing,
Does not thy soul my secret tell ?
The earliest victim of thy wooing—
Thou know’st me now, lost Isabel.

I come, bad man, to give thee warning,
Thy sins cry out, and Justice hears ;
Nor would’st thou see another morning,
Did not fair Mercy plead with tears.
But oh ! her voice is growing weaker,
Her pleas are by thy sinnings crost,
She blushes to become the seeker
For grace on thee—she deems thee lost.

If by the time that morn discovers
Her yellow light to the brown hills,
No guardian angel o’er thee hovers,
No other spirit thy frame fills,
Thou shalt lie low ; and ere the going
Of the bright sun adown the West,
By him that said it—the All-knowing,
Thou shalt be gone, but not to rest.”

'T is hushed ; he looks with horror round him ;
 There 's but himself with life that stirs ;
 One groan, and the next moment found him,
 Lying low beneath the nodding firs.
 And then, while the cold moon was shedding
 Her silver light on the brown sod,
 And twinkling stars their maze were threading,
 He, weeping, thus addressed his God.

" I kneel—to pray—I who have never Yet knelt in prayer, kneel to beseech
 Forgiveness ; Thou did'st say that ever
 Thy pardon penitence should reach.
 Now in the dust behold me humbled,
 And shuddering at thy just rage lie ;
 The worm that feeds on bodies crumbled
 Is better in thy sight than I.

All-righteous Judge ! recall thy sentence,
 Allow me time to mend my ways ;
 And as I show or not repentance,
 So lengthen, or abridge my days.
 If that my heart still cleaves to errors,
 Then execute thy named decree ;
 But if I mend, O ! veil thy terrors,
 And look with eyes of love on me."

He ceased. Whose are the tones that greet him
 Soft as the gentle gales of spring ?
 'T is she who comes, weak girl ! to meet him,
 As 't were upon a plover's wing.

He answers not her fond caresses,
 But with mild speech he bids her go ;
 And says "tomorrow braid thy tresses,
 And deck thyself for bridal show."

'Tis morn, there's frolic in the hamlet,
 The rustics' joys to transports swell ;
 And many a cheek as brown as camlet,
 Goes to the nuptials of Tom Bell.
 He's changed, they see, he checks their riot,
 He speaks of foul paths he has trod ;
 And in his face there reigns the quiet
 Of one at peace with a kind God.

Now evermore at the broad chancel,
 He wakes the earliest anthem's swell ;
 Nor with hymns only does he cancel
 His debts with Justice—he lives well.
 His beds have pillows for the weary,
 His wardrobe garments for the poor,
 He makes the hungry orphan cheery,
 He reads the Scriptures to the boor.

At home, abroad, dry, wet, night, morning,
 'Tis all the same, he's ever calm,
 Each day with some new trait adorning
 Poor nature—gathering stores of balm.
 And far and wide his praise is sounding ;
 His good deeds distant cities tell ;
 And slanderers who delight in wounding
 Say nought against Reformed Tom Bell.

A MOOR'S CURSE ON SPAIN.

With tearful eyes and swelling hearts, they leave
Grenada's gate,
And the wind blows fair to waft their barks across the narrow strait;
They have hoisted sail, and they are gone,—the last of all the Moors,
Whom bigot zeal hath banished from their much-loved
Spanish shores.

The remnants of those warlike tribes, who trode on Spanish necks,
Whom, name you to Castilian ears, if you delight to vex;
Now broken, not by sword and spear, but papal racks
alone,
They go, to found, where Dido reigned, another Moslem throne.

There stood upon the deck a Moor, who had to Mecca been,
Whose hoary hair proclaimed his years beyond three score and ten.
He had tasted of the water of Zemzeim's holy well,
And could read the monarch's magic ring, and speak the direful spell.

And there he watched, that aged man, till they had Calpe past,

And saw, with eye of boding gloom, the land receding fast.

“Blow, blow ye winds, and waft us from Xeres’ glorious plain,

Then be ye calm, while I pronounce a Moor’s curse on Spain.

“Thou did’st bow, Spain, for ages, beneath a Moorish yoke,

And save Asturia’s mountain sons, there were none to strike a stroke ;

On mountain top and lowland plain, thy fate was still the same,

Thy soldiers drew dull scymitars, and the crescent overcame.

“The days, which saw our martial deeds, are fled to come no more ;

A warrior monarch rules thee now, and we give the battle o’er ;

Abencarrage wakes not, when the battle trumpets call,
And Abderame sleeps in death, beside th’ Alhambra’s wall.

“I leave to thee, my curse, proud Spain ! a curse upon thy clime ;

Thou shalt be the land of dastard souls, a nursery of crime ;

And yet, as if to mock her sons, and make their dark doom worse,

No land shall boast more glorious skies, than the lovely land I curse.

“Thy kings shall wear no royal type, save a diadem alone,

And their sovereignty by cruelty and a withering eye be known.

’T were waste of time to speak my curse ; for, Spain,
thy sons shall see,

That magic can invoke no fiend, worse than thy kings will be.

“And that blind faith, thou holdest from the Prophet of the Cross,

A faith thy children have profaned, and its better doctrines lost ;

By the lords that faith shall give thee, not less shalt thou be gored,

Because they grasp a crucifix, instead of spear and sword.

“Bright eyes are in thy land, Spain, and thy virgins want no charms,

But thou art cursed to know no truth in either heart or arms ;

Their bosoms shall no pillow be, for aught is kind or brave,

But lull in mere illicit love, the sensual priest and slave.

“Thy sway shall reach to distant lands, shall yield thee gold and gem,

But a burning and a bloody sword, shall thy sceptre be o'er them,
 Till vengeance meet the murderous bands, from thine
 accursed shore,
 And give them of the land they seek,—a grave of clotted gore."

The Guadalquiver's banks shall be divested of their pride,
 The castles of our valiant race deck no more the mountain side,
 And Ruin's mouldering hand shall sweep to Spain's remotest shore,
 And all her fertile regions weep the exile of the Moor.

THE SEA DIVER.

My way is on the bright blue sea,
 My sleep upon its rocking tide ;
 And many an eye has followed me
 Where billows clasp the worn sea-side.

My plumage bears the crimson blush,
 When ocean by the sun is kissed !
 When fades the evening's purple flush,
 My dark wing cleaves the silver mist.

Full many a fathom down beneath
 The bright arch of the splendid deep,
 My ear has heard the sea shell breathe
 O'er living myriads in their sleep.

They rested by the coral throne,
 And by the pearly diadem,
 Where the pale sea-grape had o'ergrown
 The glorious dwellings made for them.

At night upon my storm-drenched wing,
 I poised above a helmless bark,
 And soon I saw the shattered thing
 Had passed away and left no mark.

And when the wind and storm had done,
 A ship, that had rode out the gale,
 Sunk down—without a signal gun,
 And none was left to tell the tale.

I saw the pomp of day depart,—
 The cloud resign its golden crown,
 When to the ocean's beating heart,
 The sailor's wasted corse went down.

Peace be to those whose graves are made
 Beneath the bright and silver sea !—
 Peace that their relics there were laid
 With no vain pride and pageantry.

SARDANAPALUS AT THE TEMPLE OF BELUS.

This spacious mausoleum holds
Proud dust in many a worshipped shrine ;
Yon massive golden urn enfolds
The Founder of our line.
In gloomy grandeur, here are laid
The gods, our regal race have made.

Yes, here are sleeping side by side
The gods, Assyrian queens have borne ;
Warriors of madmen deified,
And tyrants overthrown.
Why, since my sires are all divine,
Am I, their son, without a shrine ?

I have unto my people been
A father, brother and a friend !
Go to the Western Island-men—
Go eastward to mine empire's end ;
If there be one hath wrong of me,
Him, fourfold recompense shall see.

I loved the glittering javelin not—
I did not love war's bloody suit ;
I left the field where nations fought,
To listen to the lute ;
I passed the prancing war-horse by,
To gaze at beauty's melting eye.

I never crushed Assyria's sons
 To build Colossal temples high ;
 I bade the sire his little ones
 Watch with a parent's eye.
 Throughout the land no vassal strives
 With a hard lord, nor wears his gyves.

I bade my subjects plant the vine
 Throughout the realms my sceptre sways ;
 And bade them drink the joyous wine,
 A feandst away their days.
 Sardanapalus thence hath lost
 His golden shrine and holocaust.

For had I made the rivers dance
 With waves of blood from prostrate foes ;
 And couched a warrior's murdering lance,
 And broke my land's repose ;
 Then had my glory walked abroad
 And I had been enshrined a god.

What else but wide-spread carnage made
 The founder of our line a god ;—
 A man, whose dark ambition bade
 Earth be a crimsoned sod ;
 A bloody hunter, yet behold !
 His shrine is of thrice beaten gold.

And she, the queen of Belus' son,
 Who built this sanctuary high,

And planned it—proud presuming one !

With roof-tree laid against the sky ;
Because she loved war,—when she died
Wide realms her queenship deified.

But I, because my regal day

Hath been arrayed in pleasure's dress ;
Because I loved soft music's lay
And beauty's dear caress ;
Because I women loved, and wine,
Am thence to be denied a shrine.
